FIRE HAZARD EXTREME IN B.C. INTERIOR

VANCOUVER (CP) — Hot windy weather in central and eastern British Columbia has raised the forest fire hazard in much of the area to extreme, a forestry department official said today.

During the past 24 hours, 27 new fires broke out in the Prince George, Kamloops and Nelson districts, bringing the total now burning in the province to 159.

A fire at Lytton which 10 days ago threatened the town is still burning.

Peterson Intervenes In B.C. Woods Dispute

Requests Sides To Delay Voting

Provincial Labor Minister Leslie Peterson has personally intervened in British Columbia's coast forest industry dispute in an attempt to prevent a shutdown.

He has asked both management and the union to suspend voting on the recommendations for settlement contained in the Nemetz report released earlier this week, pending further study.

In a telegram to Jack Moore, regional president of the 27,000-member International Woodworkers of America, and John Billings, president of Forest Industrial Relations, which represents 116 coast companies, Peterson said:

"I am alarmed at the position taken by the parties both officially and unofficially in respect to the Nemetz report.

"In view of the importance of the forest industry to the economy of the province, the government recommends that further study be given by the parties to the full implications of the Nemetz report.

URGES MEET

"I will be prepared to meet separately with the parties if they so wish during the course of the next 10 days. In the meantime I would ask that a vote on the acceptance or rejection of the report by both union and management be suspended," the telegram concluded.

The IWA negotiating committee announced Thursday it will recommend rejection of the Nemetz settlement proposals when union members vote on them early in September.

Negotiators, including Victoria local president Murray Drew, met in Vancouver this morning apparently to discuss the labor minister's offer, but could not be contacted.

FIR president John Billings said he had nothing further to add to the earlier feeling of "disappointment" over the cost impact of the wage proposals.

Mr. Justice Nathan Nemetz, who headed a two-week inquiry into the industry, recommended a pay increase of 60 cents an hour over two years and an additional 30 cents for tradesmen, with further increases for other skills.

OBJECTIONS

Among IWA objections to the proposals are failure of the judge to recommend a health and welfare plan, fully-paid by the employers and administered by the union and inclusion of sub-contracted work under the master agreement.

The union said there was not enough improvement in other fringe areas to warrant acceptance. For example, the report did not offer free room and board for camp workers, made no correction in a wage imbalance in plywood mills, and leaves unanswered special questions related to trades.

MAINLAND GETS GAMES

OTTAWA (CP) — Health Minister John Munro announced today that New Westminster and Burnaby, B.C., will be the site of the 1973 Canada Summer Games.

The federal government provides multi-million dollar grants for sports facilities in cities where the games are held. The first summer games were held in Halifax and Dartmouth in 1969.

Storm Cleanup Under Way In Ontario

Times News Services

SUDBURY — The huge task of assessing damage and clearing debris began in earnest in this section of Ontario today, following Thursday's storm which killed four persons and injured 150.

The cleanup, conducted under sunny skies, could be prolonged because hundreds of persons were left homeless by the storm.

Officials of the four communities most seriously affected toured the area today to inspect damages, which will total millions of dollars.

The storm, packing torrential rain and winds of up to 90 miles an hour, smashed through the mining communities of Lively and Copper Cliff, into the southern edge of Sudbury and on to the logging community of Field 45 miles to the east.

The storm had the effect of a hurricane, leaving buildings in ruins, uprooting trees and sections of concrete sidewalk, smashing windows and vehicles and cutting power and telephone lines.

A spokesman for Ontario Hydro said the utility lost more than $1,000,000 in equipment damage in the Sudbury district alone.

Bell Canada said 85 poles, 15,000 feet of cable and 1,000 drop wires connecting houses to cables will have to be replaced.

Listed as dead by police and Red Cross officials were:

Paul Reback, 67, a gardener with the Copper Cliff parks commission, struck by debris while working on a tractor in a park;

Vincent Howard, 52, of Sudbury, pinned under a half-ton truck in which he was a passenger, when the vehicle was toppled by the wind on Highway 17;

Mrs. Cordelia Quenneville, 58, of Field, killed when the wind picked up her 35-foot house trailer, hurled it 200 feet, against a deserted barn and pushed it 500 feet further on;

Pasquale Rocca, 57, of Toronto, an employee of Norco Construction who had been doing repairs at a house in Lively and took shelter in a garage when the storm hit. The wind hurled a camp trailer through the garage roof, pinning him to the floor.

★ ★ ★

Six children used a door as a stretcher and carried their injured mother one mile over fallen trees and tangled hydro wires to a truck that took her to hospital in North Bay.

Mrs. Joseph Lefebvre was trapped under the walls of her home when it was demolished by the storm.

The mayors of Sudbury and Lively described their communities as disaster areas and called on army trainees, miners, boy scouts and volunteers to aid police, firemen and members of the Emergency Measures Organization to aid in relief work.

Police and hospital spokesmen said about 50 persons had been admitted to hospitals in the Sudbury area. Another 100 had been treated and released.

The Red Cross estimated that about 350 persons had been left homeless in the Sudbury and Lively areas, where 86 houses were destroyed and more than 100 heavily damaged. Some of the Sudbury homes were in the $50,000 range.

MORTARS FIRED ACROSS RIVER

N. Viets Sight Phnom Penh

PHNOM PENH (AP) — Viet Cong and North Vietnamese forces within sight of Phnom Penh slammed mortars into Cambodian defence lines across the Mekong River from the royal palace, a military spokesman reported today. But hard fighting reported Thursday within six miles of the capital eased off.

Heavy losses were reported on both sides. The spokesman said it least 19 Cambodian troops were killed and 124 wounded. He claimed 500 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong were killed, a claim that foreign observers generally viewed with skepticism.

The spokesman said while some Communist troops fired a few mortars into government positions directly across the mile-wide river from the royal palace, the bulk of the Communist force was about six miles northeast of the capital.

The mortar fire "was just a probe to check our defences and draw them out," he added.

The Cambodian forces retreated about two miles southward to Prek Kraboa from Prek Tameak late Thursday after Prek Tameak was overrun. The Cambodian spokesman said the withdrawal was a tactical move to permit bombers to hammer the Communists.

Only small ground skirmishes were reported in South Vietnam, and the U.S. command began reducing its B-52 raids. The Pentagon announced Thursday that B-52 missions would be limited to an average of 1,000 sorties a month, a sortie being one flight by one bomber. The average rate recently has been 1,400 a month, informed sources said.

Qualified sources said all B-52 raids in the future would be flown from U-Tapao Air Base in Thailand. The B-52s that have been flying from Guam and Okinawa will be held in reserve.

Mail Nearing Standstill As Strikes Escalate

Times News Services

Canada's crippled mail service has almost come to a halt today with a major escalation of the postal union's hit-and-run strike campaign.

Victoria and most of British Columbia were without mail movement for the second straight day, but indications were that the walkout will end Saturday.

The new wave of rotating strikes reached its highest point in weeks as office after office across the land were struck — or in some cases closed down because insuficient mail was on hand.

TO SIT DOWN

Negotiations resume Saturday between the 27,000-member Council of Postal Unions and the federal government. They will sit down with Thomas O'Connor, a Toronto labor relations specialist.

O'Connor met council and government representatives together for about two hours Thursday before both sides went to separate rooms for further preliminary discussions.

O'Connor strolled through the restaurant and lobby of a downtown hotel where the talks are being held in shirtsleeves, available for meetings with either group.

He told reporters there were hopeful signs in the first few hours of discussion but it was too soon to make predictions.

The issues involved are not new ones, said O'Connor, a veteran of many labor disputes. "But the political aspects of the dispute are new."

O'Connor, the dispute's second mediator, returned to Toronto today on business but expected to return well before the 10 a.m. EDT starting time for Saturday's discussions.

QUIT IN JUNE

A. W. R. Carrothers, the first mediator, quit after four days of meeting with both sides in June. Carrothers, president of the University of Calgary, said no progress was being made at the time.

O'Connor said he is hopeful some agreement will be

SOMETHING TO HIDE?

Egypt Raps Spying

Times News Services

Egypt rejected today American surveillance of the Middle East ceasefire by satellite and U-2 spy plane, calling the plan a "pretext for espionage." Political circles in Israel said this showed Cairo had "something to hide."

Such reconnaissance, "even if undertaken over Israeli-held territories, could provide Israel with additional advantages in the present delicate circumstances," said Cairo's semi-official newspaper Al Ahram.

The Egyptian statement came as a surprise. When the United States announced earlier in the week that it was undertaking reconnaissance and had informed Egypt, it was generally understood that it was being done with Cairo's consent.

Al Ahram said Egypt's stand had been known all along. It added that the United States "must adopt a neutral stand regarding this 'issue' if it is interested in seeing peace in the Middle East."

Al Ahram said Egypt also had turned down an American suggestion for Soviet high-level reconnaissance. But both the U.S. suggestion and the Egyptian rejection were formalities because the Soviet Union already has large numbers of military personnel on duty with Egypt's air and missile forces, and needs no high-flying planes or spaceships to keep it abreast of developments.

Th' ironical part of it is thet if all th' union negotiators got all they demand, there wouldn't be any jobs left in th' country fer anybody but negotiators.

Vehicles Set Afire as Indian Violence Continues

By INDER MALHOTRA
The Manchester Guardian

CALCUTTA — The tempo of violence here rose to a fierce pitch Thursday as two trams, five state buses, a police van and a fire engine were burned by rampaging mobs.

The rampage was a continuation of violence which broke out in the same part of the city Wednesday, sparked by the death in a Calcutta jail of a young man said to be a member of the pro-Moscow Communist Party faction. Mobs which surrounded the jail alleged that the youth had been beaten to death.

Worse trouble erupted at Durgapur, West Bengal's biggest industrial complex, scene of a face-to-face confrontation between the Marxist Communist Party and authorities, which had been relatively peaceful all week. After some cases of arson and violence, authorities imposed a curfew. The trouble at the industrial complex probably sprang from Marxist frustration over the light response to their call for an indefinite strike against all employers.

An important reason for the Marxist failure here is that their strike has nothing to do with trade union demands. It was called to demand withdrawal of the police and industrial security men, who have taken over watchmen's duties at the state-owned steel plant, as well as the release of some union leaders, including one prominent Marxist, arrested for complicity in four politically motivated murders at the industrial complex early this month.

The Marxists threaten to spread strikes and paralyze normal life all over West Bengal. All state government employees have been asked to strike for three days starting Aug. 26, although the government has warned them of dire consequences.

But despite the Durgapur strike call's general failure, increased strike activity in West Bengal may be expected during the next eight weeks because this period precedes Bengal's most important festival, Pujas. Employers always squabble with workers around this time over how large the holiday bonus payment will be.

Canadian Planes Collide in Flight

BAGOTVILLE, Que. (CP) — Two Canadian Forces CF-5 aircraft from 433 tactical combat squadron here collided in mid-air today about 65 miles north of Bagotville.

Capt. Maurice Roy, Canadian Forces spokesman at the base, said it had not yet been determined what happened to the pilots. He did not give their names.

Capt. Roy said a search for wreckage and survivors is under way but no other details were immediately available.

The accident occurred about 10:30 a.m.

both said union members should accept the Nemetz recommendations.

Duncan IWA president Weldon Jubenville said:

"If they (Bennett and Peterson) are really interested in industrial peace I suggest they keep their snouts right out of it."

Bennett said in Kelowna:

"As premier of the province I am asking the negotiating committee to reconsider and recommend acceptance."

Peterson said Thursday he found it hard to understand why the union leaders recommended rejection of the report.

"I think it should be remembered that the IWA was the party that suggested in the first instance that Mr. Justice Nemetz undertake this task," he said.

"We have acceded to their request, selected the man they wanted, and if they are thinking of using this report as a stepping-stone for greater awards, they are barking up the wrong tree."

Commenting on the telegram at noon today, Peterson revealed he spoke with Moore Thursday night and early today.

The labor minister appeared to feel Moore and the IWA negotiating committee will not oppose his involvement in the dispute despite a statement Thursday by Duncan IWA president Weldon Jubenville.

'People—Not Industry' Major Pollution Threat

VANCOUVER (CP) — Individuals pose a greater threat to the environment than industrial operations, the former head of the B.C. pollution control branch said Thursday.

Charles J. Keenan said the public has been conditioned by press reports to believe that "we face an environmental disaster" caused by industry.

"This is just not true and all of the evidence available points to local areas of stress, almost exclusively associated with people and their centres of population," he said.

"In short, masses of people and their individual activities appear to be the source of greatest concern.

"The private automobile and the home furnace place more stress on the assimilative faculties of the atmosphere, as a whole, than do our industrial plants."

Mr. Keenan, now a private consultant, made the comments to the inquiry into pollution by the B.C. forest industry.

EIGHTH DAY

The inquiry, being conducted by W. N. Venables, present director of the pollution control branch, goes into its eighth day of hearings today.

Mr. Keenan criticized the negative attitude held by some groups toward the Pollution Control Act which he said provided an "excellent format for controlling pollution." He said he had helped prepare the act before it was passed into law by the provincial legislature in 1967.

Mr. Keenan said the forest industry should be allowed to discharge wastes into water and air only to the extent that these wastes could be absorbed by the environment.

He suggested it would be "unequitable and unreasonable" to expect mills in various geographical areas of the province to meet the same pollution control standards.

SPENDING PLANNED

G. S. Bowell, president of Rayonier Canada (B.C.) Ltd., told the inquiry his company plans to spend nearly $12 million on a water pollution abatement program at its Port Alice Pulp mill in the next eight years.

He said that water quality in Neroutsos Inlet "is admittedly degraded" by the discharge of all water effluents directly into the water from the plant.

The pollution program must take into account the mill's production obligations, revenue produced by the mill, the employment needs of the workers, and future social and aesthetic demands of the area, said Mr. Bowell.

He said the mill has been in operation since 1917 and is not impairing any recreational use with the effluent it was dispersing.

Dr. Bruce Fraser, spokesman for the Nelson chapter of the Kootenay Pollution Control Association, called on the government to recognize citizens' anti-pollution groups.

"Such recognition should be given so that the groups "might be effectively used to monitor the forest industry," he said.

CITIZEN VOICE

Mr. Fraser, a biological sciences professor at Selkirk College, told the inquiry some standard procedures should be worked out that would allow private citizens to report effectively to the pollution control board.

Colin Palmer, vice-chairman of the Powell River Anti-Pollution Association, told the inquiry he had affidavit evidence that a resident of the town had become sick on one occasion because of the odor from the MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. pulp mill.

Dr. J. H. Smith, director of the provincial government's division of occupational health, asked him whether the fact that one person becoming sick from the odor proved anything.

"I realize one person isn't a good test, but I am endeavoring to get more," he told Mr. Smith, a member of the inquiry's seven-man advisory panel.

Airline 'Sorry' For Flight Delay

CP Air apologized today for an overnight delay in a charter flight from England to Victoria earlier this week.

A spokesman for the company in Vancouver also said CP Air will investigate to see "this does not recur, in terms of the handling."

A series of delays and complications resulted in a number of the 250 passengers, most of them from Victoria and Vancouver Island, spending the night in Gatwick Airport. Several passengers have said they will complain to CP Air.

The company spokesman said the delay was caused by illness of a crew member and the required time before he could be replaced.

The accommodation problem was aggravated because another flight was delayed before CP Air's "and saturated accommodation in the Gatwick area," he said.

"I gather the situation was not as well handled as it might have been and for this we apologize."

He said Gatwick is not part of CP Air's regular schedule and the company relies on employees of other airlines "and the indications are this was not as well handled as we and the passengers would like it to be. In that respect, I guess all we can do is apologize. We have the greatest sympathy with their annoyance."

He said it was "an unusual combination of circumstances" which had not happened before.

reached — at least on mon-monetary matters — over the weekend.

The postal workers have been staging rotating strikes for the last three months to support their demands, with the government retaliating by closing down regional offices in some areas affected by the strikes.

LOCAL PICTURE

Local post office and postal union officials today confirmed the current rotating strike will end Saturday morning when inside workers resume sorting operations.

Public service supervisor Leon Hall said there will probably be a rural mail delivery Saturday, with letter carriers to resume deliveries Monday.

"The situation is the same as it was yesterday," Hall said, "except Prince George has been suspended."

"Nobody seems to have any idea whether they'll be going back to work tomorrow, but we expect they will."

Marcel Boutin, Victoria branch president of the Letter Carriers Union said the phrase "indefinite time" which had been used to describe the current strike very likely did not apply to Greater Victoria postal outlets.

"That's how they phrased it from Vancouver but it looks as if the inside workers will go back tomorrow morning."

Vancouver strike headquarters was still awaiting word from Ottawa as to the duration of the strikes throughout the rest of the province.

The latest B.C. strikes started at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday in Vancouver and by Thursday morning had spread to all but 11 postal outlets in the province.

Today marks the fifth day Victoria's main post office has been closed since the rotating strike tactic began to be used by the Council of Postal Unions.

The main office has also been closed twice through suspensions of service which the government says are necessary because of lack of mail.

Foreign Money At $46 Million

OTTAWA (CP) — Foreign investment in Canada at the end of 1969 was estimated at $46,000 million in preliminary figures for the year released today by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

This included $41,000 million in long-term foreign investment, showing an increase of about $3,500 million in long-term capital and re-invested earnings. Other shorter-term investments by non-residents brought the total of Canada's external liabilities to $46,000 million, the bureau said.

Offsetting the foreign investment was a flow of Canadian long-term investment abroad along with accrued earnings and other claims by Canadians on non-residents, which together totalled $18,000 million.

The figures for 1969 released by the bureau were described as preliminary estimates.

At the end of 1967, Canada's net indebtedness was $25,200 million, with gross foreign investment in Canada of $40,200 million and Canadian holdings abroad of $15,000 million.

The figures on long-term capital investment are given at their book value, which in many cases far underestimates their current value.

Police Court

A man charged with dangerous driving who told court he had never driven before was sentenced to two months in jail Thursday by Judge William Ostler.

Billy Arthur, 31, of 524 Constance was driver of a car during an incident early Thursday morning in which a female passenger suffered a miscarriage.

Ostler described the crime as "the most heinous" dangerous driving case he had ever judged. He said it was "simply miraculous" nobody else was hurt.

Arthur drove a car which knocked over a stop sign and a telephone pole before it disappeared down the road.

He was also banned from driving for one year.

The judge showed more sympathy to Douglas Brown, currently serving time, when he found out Brown, charged with false pretences, obtained $50 in toys for his children Christmas Eve.

"Are you resolved to put all this behind you and rejoin your family," Ostler asked.

Brown replied that his wife had said he must straighten out in order to return home.

"Well you wouldn't blame her, would you?" Ostler said. "It's pretty hard to be left with a family to look after with a husband in jail all this time."

He sentenced Brown to four months in jail, to be served concurrent to a present sentence.

Ostler originally ordered a six-month sentence, but shortened it when he discovered that Brown would get out of jail earlier for good behavior.

Thomas Price, 20, of Bremerton, Wash. told court he never intended to bring marijuana into Canada but mechanical trouble forced him to bring his 35-foot sailboat into Victoria.

He was arrested Aug. 20 when 4½ ounces of marijuana were found aboard the vessel is the Inner Harbor.

"I use the marijuana as a relaxer before I go to sleep," he told Ostler.

"We'd have been sailing about 150 miles off shore. I didn't even want to land in Canada."

"It's an offence in both countries, isn't it?" Ostler asked.

He fined Price $400.

Thomas Lamb, 30, of 832 Esquimalt Road, was sentenced to one day in jail and fined $100 for possessing stolen property worth more than $50.

He was given stolen eight-track stereo tapes as a wedding present, court was told at an earlier session.

Canadian Exports Up 17 Per Cent

OTTAWA (CP)—Canadian exports rose 16.7 per cent to $8.58 billion in the first seven months of 1970 compared with the same period in 1969, Dominion Burea of Statistics said today.

Exports to the European Economic Community were up 44 per cent at $675 million, to the United Kingdom 36.2 per cent at $902 million, and to Japan 28.9 per cent at $478 million.

Exports to the United States were up 8.8 per cent at $6.49 billion.

July figures alone, compared with the same month in 1969, showed a rise of 82.8 per cent in exports to the United Kingdom, 79.7 per cent to the European Economic Community, 30.6 per cent to Japan and nine per cent to the United States.

The July total of $1.48 billion was 21.5 per cent above the $1.22 billion of July, 1969.

DBS said a $262 million increase was partly accounted for by increased shipments of nickel ores and aircraft to Britain and the EEC. Anticipation of a dock strike in Britain in late July also may have led to accelerated shipments to the country, the bureau said.

Larger exports of iron ores, crude petroleum, natural gas and nickel alloys helped account for the increase in exports to the U.S. Wheat shipments to Russia were about $20 million higher than in July, 1969.

B.C. Gazette Boosts Rates

Cost of placing official notices of fewer than 100 words will rise by 30 per cent from $5 to $6.50 and longer notices will increase in cost by a smaller percentage varying with length.

EMPRESS TO HOLD WHOOP-UP

The Empress Hotel will sponsor two days of public entertainment at the Causeway, Friday and Saturday, Sept. 4 and 5.

Activities will include street dances at 8 p.m. on both nights and singalongs and concerts Saturday afternoon from 3 to 6 p.m.

The hotel had sought a $200 grant from Victoria council to help with expenses for the event. But the request was refused at a meeting of council's finance committee Thursday.

Ald. Ove Witt said the money should come from the Victoria Visitors Bureau or the Chamber of Commerce.

THE WEATHER

More sunny, warm weather is predicted for Saturday.

The weather office at Victoria International Airport says temperatures will be in the low to mid 70s and in the mid 60s near the water.

Winds will be west 15 over the Juan de Fuca Strait.

Adults Offered 100 Night Courses

Saanich school board will offer more than 100 courses in its adult education program which gets under way during the fall.

A brochure describing the courses has been mailed to Peninsula residents. Additional copies are available from the board office in Sidney or from public libraries in Brentwood, Saanich and Sidney.

The courses cost $1 a night and are open to secondary students 15 and over. Pensioners may enrol at half-price.

Adult education director Frank Baxter said the courses are designed for adults "in an attempt to meet community needs."

New courses to be offered this year include: retail control systems, mathematics in business, identifying household antiques, yoga, cartooning, Christmas decorations, cooking cabaret, graphics, small gasoline engines, hairstyling and hairpiece care, and uninvited guests (all about household pests).

Subject areas in which courses will again be offered are: foreign languages, commercial subjects, educational improvement, recreation and fitness, painting and pottery, cooking and sewing, hobbies and crafts, construction and machines, and commercial subjects.

Canada Manpower has agreed to sponsor eligible students in commercial courses which upgrade skills, and vocational counsellors will staff two free short courses designed to help adults seeking employment.

Courses will begin during the week of Sept. 14.

HUSAK
. . . honored guest

BONN (AP) — The Soviet government entertained Czechoslovakia's Communist party chief, Gustav Husak, in Moscow today as an honored guest just two years to the day after Russian troops brought his predecessor to the Soviet capital under arrest.

The presence of Husak, the successor to Alexander Dubcek, at a Communist summit meeting is a graphic illustration of the political changes in Central Europe since the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia Aug. 20, 1968, shocked the Western world.

The key to the shift has been Chancellor Willy Brandt's coming to power in West Germany. For the Moscow summit was called to discuss a treaty the Russians signed last week with West Germany—the same country the Russians accused of helping Dubcek to undermine the Communist system in Czechovlovakia.

Brandt, a socialist with impeccable anti-Nazi credentials, has been accepted by the Russians as a negotiating partner. For his part, he has shown a willingness—despite domestic opposition—to give up Bonn's inflexible positions on the territory Germany lost in the Second World War.

The result has been the Soviet-German treaty, which is expected to improve Bonn's ties not only with the Soviet Union but also with the Communist countries of Eastern Europe, including Czechoslovakia.

TALKS IMMINENT

Husak's regime already has sent out feelers to Bonn. West German officials say talks probably will start within the next few months. The two countries do not have diplomatic relations, and the talks might eventually lead to an exchange of ambassadors.

Any Prague-Bonn agreement will be strictly within the limits set by Moscow, probably at Thursday's summit conference, and will not include such items as joint-venture enterprises, which were suggested in the Dubcek era.

Despite this, better relations with Bonn would benefit the Czechoslovaks and might make the burden of the Soviet occupation more bearable.

There would be economic advantages, and any agreement backed by the Russians would strengthen Husak's position at home. He is still fighting off the neo-Stalinists within his party who would like to see Dubcek and his associates put on trial and a return to the terror of the 1950s.

Economic and technological exchanges with West Germany would undo some of the damage done when more than 40,000 persons, many of them skilled technicians and professional workers, fled the country following the Soviet invasion.

With the bogeyman image removed from West Germany, Husak has a chance of accomplishing at least part of what Dubcek set out to do—to bring into his country modern technology from the West.

Protest Fizzles, Business Normal

PRAGUE (Reuters) — A planned boycott of stores died aborning today as Czechoslovaks largely ignored the second anniversary of the 1968 Warsaw pact invasion of their country.

Many stores that were nearly empty this morning, apparently in response to a clandestine appeal for a protest boycott, filled up as the day wore on. Sales clerks said business was normal.

At noon, a likely time for a protest, Wenceslas Square in the centre of the city was humming with its usual activity. Last year at noon, car horns were blown and traffic stopped to protest against restrictions of the country's freedom.

Communist party officials will undoubtedly hail the absence of even passive protest today as a triumph for their policy of "normalization"—removing reformers from public life and ensuring political conformity under strict Communist control.

The only known incidents in Prague involved three East Germans and two Italians, who were questioned by police today as they tried to pay a tribute at the grave of Jan Palach, the student who burned himself to death in a protest suicide in January, 1969.

The East Germans, one of whom is a priest, also were stopped by police Thursday night as they tried to put flowers in front of the statue of King Wenceslas in Wenceslas Square. They said they had come to Czechoslovakia specially to mark the anniversary.

Czechoslovaks appeared to be buying fewer newspapers than usual, in keeping with part of the clandestine appeal for a boycott of stores, movie houses, theatres and newspapers. But movie theatre box offices were doing a normal amount of business, and downtown restaurants were full, or almost so, during the lunch hour.

Police continued to patrol the streets but were clearly breathing easier after the noon hour had passed.

Freighter, Ferry Making 11 Knots

VANCOUVER (CP) — The navigating officer of the Russian freighter Sergey Yesenin testified Thursday the ship altered its course 10 degrees to starboard and then 20 degrees to starboard three minutes before the collision with a British Columbia ferry Aug. 2.

N. N. Burnos, speaking through an interpreter, told a federal inquiry into the collision, which killed three ferry passengers, that the order to alter the freighter's course was given by the Canadian pilot in English, then translated into Russian by the ship's captain and relayed to the helmsman.

Asked if there were any other helm orders, he said:

"I didn't hear any."

Burnos, second mate on the freighter, said he did not see the approaching ferry Queen of Victoria on the ship's radar screen until the collision was imminent.

He testified he was standing watch constantly on the radar, but the only echoes he saw on the screen were those of some small fishing vessels.

He said he did not see the ferry until it was immediately ahead and added that the speed of both vessels was "not more than 11 knots."

Burnos said a short whistle blast was sounded as the Russian ship started to turn to starboard before rounding Helen Point in Active Pass, scene of the crash.

"What did you do after the collision?" asked commission counsel Guy Major.

"I marked the point on the chart and ran to the mustering point for the damage control party," he said.

"The chief officer gave the emergency signal, the ship's alarm was given, and it was announced throughout the ship where the demolition party was to gather,"

Burnos said the time of the collision was 12:07 p.m., seven minutes after he took over on the radar.

The inquiry was told he had six years experience at sea, had been in B.C. waters three times prior to the crash, but that he had never sailed through Active Pass.

Principle and Practice

THE PUBLIC'S CYNICAL RECEPTION of the announcement that highway widening along the Elk Lake shoreline will not encroach on the lake, will involve only a narrow strip and will destroy only three or four trees, is hardly to be wondered at. Modern experience shows that when natural attractions are in conflict with mechanical "progress," the latter almost invariably wins.

The no man's land that has been created at Royal Oak and for half a mile around it — all for the purpose of enabling one road to pass over another — gives no encouragement to believe that Elk Lake will be held sacrosanct if "improvements" demand its violation. There will be an outcry; there will be official and unofficial assurances that no real harm will be done, that the benefits will exceed the losses; the outcries will subside — and the job will go ahead.

The problem is that preservation of natural beauty and scenic attractions has not yet been accepted by governments at all levels as a basic principle which has to be observed. It is given attention as a guideline to be followed only after other considerations have been satisfied, and in some cases, obviously, they cannot be neglected. But in many others they can, and there have been numerous incidents in which threats to natural beauty have been eased or eliminated when public pressure forced a second look by the experts.

"It will cost more" is not necessarily a valid argument in rejecting a plea to save trees or a view or some other natural amenity, for the natural asset whose preservation is sought in human terms may be far more valuable than the man-made innovation proposed. The real cost of parkland confiscated for a power line or a building is seldom fully computed; a proper assessment of the "bargains" we get under such circumstances could be very revealing.

In the less than a century and a half that the white man has been active in this area, little that he has done has been a positive improvement on nature's original bequest. It is a humbling thought that much of what we do should be undone — and that in more enlightened times ahead it will be.

Coy Answers At Pollution Inquiry

THE PROVINCIAL INQUIRY into forest industry pollution now under way in Vancouver has produced some bizarre exchanges that can only make the public wonder just how much the provincial government is really interested in cleaning up pollution. In presenting a brief to the inquiry from the International Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers, union Vice-President Pat O'Neal said the government would not give the union any information about disposal permits granted to pulp mills, terming it confidential.

Withholding such information, which is unquestionably in the public interest, since it affects the air we breathe and the water we use, is reprehensible. The fact that the government is secretive about the terms of its mill disposal permits only raises suspicions about what the government allows to be dumped into British Columbia waters. And considering that no charges have been laid under the provincial pollution control act since its inception almost three years ago, the government's credibility comes into question where clean air and water are concerned.

That the provincial inquiry into forest industry pollution may turn out to be an exercise in futility can be shown by Chairman W. N. Venable's exasperated remarks to forest industry representatives. At one point Mr. Venables said, "There is a dearth of factual material being presented at this inquiry." Agreeing to accept written answers Mr. Venables warned, it would "defeat the purpose of a public inquiry." At other times the inquiry chairman termed some answers "evasive" and said he was close to classing one expert as a "hostile" witness.

This type of behavior by the Council of Forest Industries, and the provincial government's refusal to reveal information concerning mill disposal permits, is difficult to understand. Every segment of the community has an interest in cleaning up a threat that may some day choke us. If the government and the forest industry continue to display such coy attitudes and answers to serious questions about their operations the ultimate cost of curing pollution may be measured in livelihoods rather than dollars.

A Boost for Low Income Housing

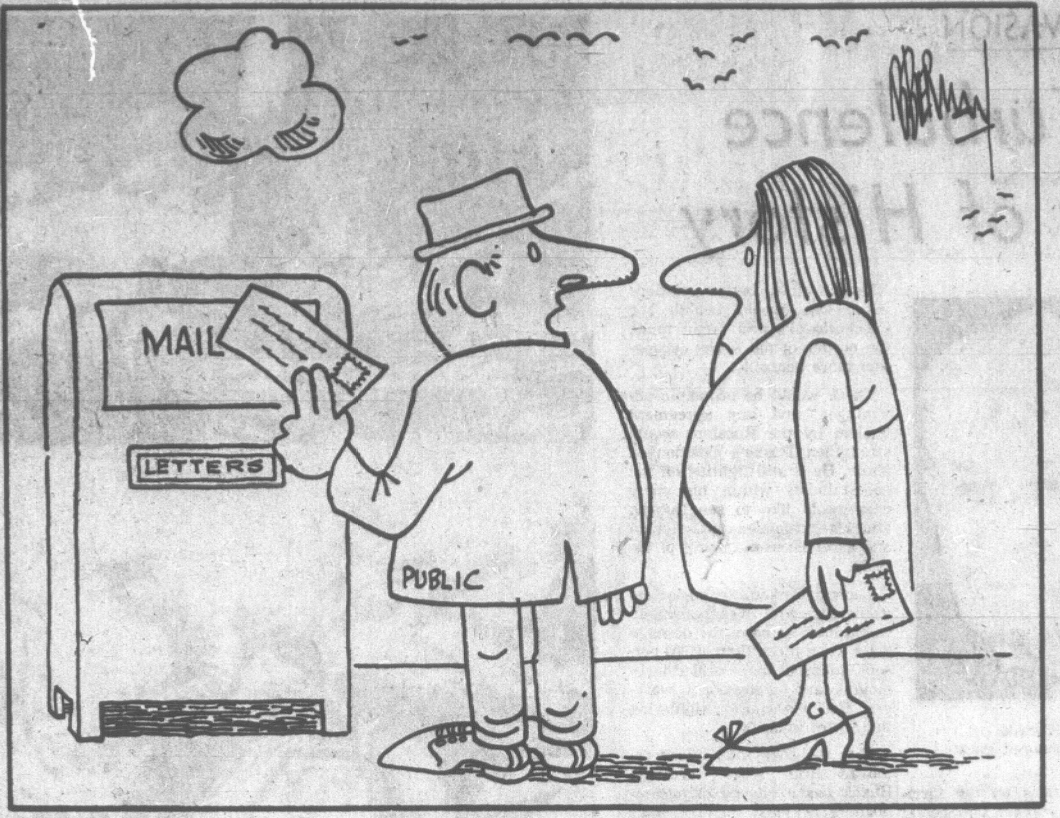
THE BATTLE AGAINST INflation has indirectly caused casualties in Canadian housing starts. In the Greater Victoria region alone there was a 43 per cent drop in new apartment starts between January 1 and the end of June, 1970. Tight money coupled with high interest rates and the increasing cost of land, plus wage increases won by construction unions, add up to fewer new dwellings. Recalling the Economic Council of Canada's warning that only a sustained house-building program over the years could hope to supply Canadians with decent housing, the effects of inflation on housing looked even grimmer.

In these circumstances Robert Andras, minister without portfolio responsible for housing, announces that he will urge all approved lending agencies to make more funds available to the residential mortgage market. And the government will lead the way by making an extra $100 millions in public funds available for low-income housing this year, which is calculated to produce 15,000 additional low-income housing starts.

Thus out of a total lending budget, in all categories, of some $954 millions for the year, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will spend $670 millions on low-income and public housing. In terms of housing starts this will mean 50,000 new dwellings in the low-income category for this year alone, compared with a total of 82,000 over the past 21 years.

The priority for public housing is entirely as it should be. Both CMHC and the building industry have shown a preference in the past for catering to middle-class and luxury-class homes. But even with government incentives, total housing starts are expected to fall 40,000 short of last year's 220,000. If there are frowns from economists there will certainly be cheers from the estimated 17,000 additional construction workers who will build the new houses, not to mention thousands of Canadians who will leave their sub-standard dwellings behind.



"... Somehow I feel ridiculous ..."

FROM WASHINGTON

'A Flypaper for Well-Meaning Bores'

Reston

THE Nixon Administration has been around long enough now so that, if you don't mind getting in a fight, you can generalize about its personality. It is cautious, tidy, industrious, and monumentally dull. It is a flypaper for efficient, well-meaning bores. It is engaged in some of the most exciting conflicts in the history of the republic, but it has somehow managed to reduce them all to the level of a mathematical equation.

It has all the figures but very little poetry. It deals with "poverty," but never quite manages to convey a sense of pity about the poor. It deals with war, but emphasizes not the American dead and wounded but the "decline" in our casualties and the "body count" of the enemy. This is odd, because this is an administration of decent, honorable men, but it talks in graphs and trends and slogans, and somehow leaves out the human element and the dust and roar of life itself.

One of the interesting things about all this is that President Nixon obviously recognizes the human element in politics. He knows that the people like good news, peace, sports, and smiling faces. So he is optimistic, emphasizes peace, calls up poor Vince Lombardi of the Washington Redskins who is fighting for his life, and smiles constantly. But there is something calculated about all this and something mirthless about the frozen smiles.

Calculated Techniques

Still, these techniques are not entirely a deception. The president is working for peace, after his own political fashion he has always admired Vince Lombardi and — believe it or not — once talked about Lombardi as a possible Republican vice-presidential nominee. But there is something missing in the human approach of this administration which even members of the president's own cabinet and White House staff deplore.

What is missing, I think, is the capacity of the president and his associates to convey to the people or even to themselves a deep feeling of conviction. The president has three fundamental problems: (1) how to withdraw from Vietnam and reduce American commitments abroad without sliding into isolation; (2) how to brake inflation without stumbling into an economic depression; and (3) how to deal with the threat of anarchy and revolution at home without defying the tradition of civil liberties within the nation.

But the personality of the Nixon administration is not quite in tune with these problems, all of which are so difficult that they cannot be proved but have to rely upon goodwill and faith. The Nixon men think of themselves, quite seriously, as moral individuals, working for good and even noble ends, but their means are still the techniques of Tammany Hall and Madison Avenue.

No doubt this will work against a Democratic party which is divided, leaderless, and just as cynical as the politicians around the president. But it still does not deal with the president's main problems.

He is still in trouble. There is something very good and important at the bottom of this Republican well, but the administration is relying on its techniques rather than on its principles. It is not confident enough to state its plain intention, to define its war aims and its policies and priorities on the home front.

It has a good political defence. It is good at getting out of awkward situations, and events overseas are going toward peace in Vietnam and the Middle East, and arms control in Vienna.

Still, the Nixon administration has not established that sense of trust or affection necessary to carry the country through the terrible ambiguous issues that often have to be taken on the personal word of the president.

It is trying to be both moral and slick at the same time. It is good at fuzzing up issues and it obviously has the Democrats off balance. But it is still an ambiguous administration. It has not even given its own cabinet or the civil service in Washington a sure sense of where it is going. It believes in keeping everybody off balance — and in that, unfortunately, it is succeeding.

Cleaning Up Cleansers

By MAURICE WESTERN, from Ottawa

Western

IN these days, when economists meet only for the purpose of prognosticating woe, humbler citizens may draw consolation from the saga of the detergent industry. Only a few short months ago morale in the industry was at low ebb — across a once bright future as perceived by leading executives had falled the long shadow of Joe Greene, minister of energy, mines and natural resources. Mr. Greene in response to the urgings of the pollution probers and on the advice of International Joint Commission's scientists had turned thumbs down on phosphates and proposed their early elimination from household cleansers in accordance with a prescribed schedule.

The problem, according to the industry and its advisers, was that, in spite of intensive research on an international scale, no alternative to phosphates was in sight or even early prospect. Before the companies was a turn in the road and beyond that, ruin. Even the cash register, however, was of secondary importance in comparison with the probable fate of the housewife and the grave implications of Mr. Greene's well intentioned but catastrophic policy for the health of the nation.

Much testimony could be quoted. It may suffice for the sake of brevity to recall the warning of the committee for water quality of the Canadian detergent industry. According to a winter release: "If action banning phosphates were implemented, housewives would be deprived of every laundry detergent brand which they have become accustomed to using to get their family's clothes clean. This step would be equivalent to setting back cleanliness standards more than 20 years. Housewives would find it virtually impossible to continue to enjoy the benefits of the modern automatic clothes washing machine."

Nor was this all. The high cleanliness demands of public health facilities and nursing homes would be seriously affected, as would be dairy and canning operations.

Hope-Destroying Verdict

Industrial scientists had pronounced their hope-destroying verdict: "At this point there does not appear to be any known single or combination of materials that can satisfactorily perform the many-faceted functions of phosphates in detergent formulations."

Mr. Greene, heedless of entreaties, imposed his schedule. A less resolute industry might have yielded at this point to utter despair. It is well known that a mere downturn on the market is enough to send brokers hurtling on to the pavements of Wall Street. The inspiring fact is that the detergent manufacturers rallied, and faith has once again produced miracles, as anyone can discover for himself from industry handouts and national advertising.

Here is a typical report from Clean Water News. X Company announced "that it is reducing the phosphate content 10-50 per cent in certain detergent products it manufactures. Jay Van Andel, chairman of the board, said that the availability of moderate amounts of a satisfactory phosphate substitute has enabled (X Company) to make the reduction."

More Encouraging

Even more encouraging is an advertisement of Y Company, which depicts no less than six of the old familiar reassuring brands with the note that "All . . . have been reformulated to give you great washday performances along with lower phosphate levels." According to the text the new formulas had to conform to government regulations while at the same time maintaining the high quality reputations of all (Y Company) brands. Every new formula was a complete success.

As it now turns out, what's good for the water, or what's left of it, is good for the detergent industry. This should encourage the new water boards to afford similar opportunities to other industries. Perhaps they too will pass their tests.

Looking Back

From the Times of August 21, 1910:

LONDON — The Army and Navy Chronicle says "Canada aims at training her own personnel. Mistakes will surely be made, but Canada is in earnest, and will ultimately build up a navy that will count." Lord Crewe replying to the suggestion that Canada train its own sailors said he did not think such a departure convenient, either for this, or for other countries.

Personal Analysis

As one of the Victoria physicians whose salary, as paid by the B.C. Medical Services Commission, was published by your newspaper this past week, I am writing to make a personal analysis of this $36,684 payment. To have to do this is most distasteful to me, nevertheless, I feel that it is absolutely essential that your readers hear from someone who is providing a medical service in this community.

I am a family physician, 43-years of age, married with two teen-age children. I graduated from U.B.C. in Pharmacy in 1950 and in Medicine in 1955. I served for four years as a Medical Officer in the Canadian Armed Forces before returning to Victoria in 1960, to enter private practice. I work approximately sixty hours per week, seeing twenty-five to thirty patients per day in the office, and from ten to fifteen patients per day in the hospital, and two to five patients in their homes. For the past two years, I have limited my practice because I am physically unable to work harder and still practise what I would consider to be good medicine.

In 1969, I received $44,041.42 in professional fees ($36,684 from the B.C. Medical Services Commission). Of this amount, I paid out $18,365.53, which were the expenses necessary to run my office (this amount included $8,178.07 in staff salaries, $4,200 in rent, $1,179.01 for the telephone, $1,010.03 in dues and licences, and $3,779.42 in miscellaneous expenses). My income, after expenses, was $25,675.89. Personal exemptions and pension contributions (I provide my own pension), brought my total taxable income to $21,426.13. I paid $7,669.73 income tax on this amount, leaving a "take-home pay" of $13,756.40, or $4.75 per hour.

If your readers would compare the figure of $13,756.40 with the published B.C. Medical Services Commission figure of $36,684, and my actual income of $44,041.42, perhaps they will better understand what these gross payments to an individual physician mean. I am sure that my expenses as a family physician are no different than any other family physician practising in Victoria, and I am equally sure that some of my specialist colleagues have expenses that often run as high as 50 per cent of their income.

In conclusion, I would like to say that I consider the publication of doctors' salaries, both by the government, and in particular, by your newspaper, to be a gross invasion of privacy. I object most strongly to having the professional fees of our profession (or any other profession for that matter), made the subject of political debate as if we were members of a public utility. If there are physicians earning excessive amounts of money for the services they are providing, then they will be dealt with, as they always have, not by the newspapers, or by the "hot-line" programs, but by their own patients, who are very much aware of the quality of the care they are receiving, if not the cost of this care, and by the B.C. Medical Association, which has always maintained a careful watch over the patterns of quality of the medical practice in this province.—J. R. LeHuquet, B.S.P., M.D.

Children's Teeth

The fluoride issue is raising its head again, though admittedly in less serious form than suggesting it be put in our water supplies. But officialdom must know, or should know, that refined sugar and soft foods are among the biggest enemies of children's teeth. The authorities would be better occupied in campaigning against these, rather than getting on the easier, and more popular, fluoridation bandwagon. — H. H. Bridge, 3904 Shelbourne St.

"Big Bluff"

Judging by the action being taken in other provinces. British Columbia's highly touted labor legislation appears to be nothing less than a great big farce. When the labor bosses make loud noises, both Mr. Bennett and Mr. Peterson shake like falling leaves. The sad part of it all, insofar as the taxpayer is concerned, is that there are three people at the top who are paid an annual salary in excess of $40,000 each — to administer what. This works out to better than $100 per day, each and every day of the year.

Old age pensioners and welfare recipients, please take note. — "Non-Union Taxpayer"

Gulf Islands

I have written Mr. Curtis, chairman of the Capital Regional District: If the avowed aim of planning — as far as the Gulf Islands are concerned — is to preserve the character of this area, then I have news for you: This much-vaunted character has already been destroyed by the mere preliminaries of planning, for the latter have sown nothing but discord, and have set friend against friend. Or don't you realize that our previously harmonious human relationships were as much part of the character of the lands as their physical environment?

Besides showing dissent and creating an uneasy climate of misunderstanding, the proponents of planning have also given cause for serious doubt regarding their true — or should I say ulterior? — motives; I am, of course, referring to the mysterious yet ultimate goal of integrating the management of the American San Juan Islands with that of the Canadian Gulf Islands — as set out in the "Gulf Islands Study."

Therefore I am asking you, Mr. Curtis, what is behind this oblique goal? We want the truth!—W. Bangert, R.R. 1, Ganges.

Castro's 'One Man Rule' Failure May Lead to Government Reforms

By K. S. KAROL
New Statesman

"You in Europe tend to underestimate the role of the great figures of history," said Armando Hart, a leading member of the Cuban government, as we talked one day in Havana.

His aim was to convince me that without Fidel Castro there would have been no revolution in Cuba, that this little island would never have been able to resist American pressure or stand up to its unlikely ally Russia.

It is hardly surprising that all his old comrades in arms have such unstinted admiration and devotion for Fidel. But this hero worship, however historically deserved, expresses itself all too often in plain docility. There is no question of their ever contradicting Fidel and even less of engaging in a political trial of strength to challenge any of his decisions.

Lone Speaker

I can testify to this, having made a long trip into the Eastern Provinces of Cuba with Fidel and his entourage. At least half a dozen ministers sat down at our collective meals but only Fidel spoke and none of his collaborators found it expedient to air his views on any of the matters that came up.

But it isn't only at the summit of the Cuban pyramid that political life is reduced to its most simplistic expression. In his direct dialogue with the rank and file, Fidel Castro never dreamed of developing institutions which would allow the workers to express themselves, or give them a say in the management of their affairs.

There is no hypocrisy on this subject in Havana. There, foreign visitors are never subjected to boring Soviet-type lectures on the superiority of the "socialist" electoral system compared with that of the "formal democracies."

In Cuba no one is elected nor does anyone pretend otherwise. There is no Supreme Soviet, even for appearances' sake, and the Cuban Communist Party has not yet deemed it necessary to summon its first national congress. All decrees of state and party are provisional, handed down from above, on the order of Castro and his close collaborators.

For years the enemies of the Cuban revolution have accused Fidel of having concentrated all power in his own hands to satisfy his appetite for power. I believe, on the contarary, that the present situation results from the whole process of government gradually sliding into Castro's control and that he has been more the victim than the beneficiary of this development.

For 12 years this indefatigable man has subjected himself to a punishing routine in order to tackle alone an incredible burden of problems, both great and small, and to arouse the productive enthusiasm of his countrymen.

Unfortunately, I got the impression that his own output was disproportionately small in relation to his efforts because the task that he had set himself was beyond the capacity of one man.

Grandiose Plan

During a long stay in Cuba in 1968 I tried to discuss with Castro himself the problem of the lack of an institutional framework in Cuba and its consequences.

It was at a farewell dinner at an experimental farm some 50 miles south of the capital, and we had started off on the various contemporary problems. Once more Fidel explained to me that the target harvest of 10 million tons of sugar set for 1970 would be reached and that its benefits would be not only economic but political.

I had no technical arguments with which to oppose him although I already sensed that the grandiose sugar plan, involving the drainage of all manpower into one sector, might well unbalance the whole economy. However, this is not what I would like to discuss first. When the occasion occurred, I raised the question of Cuba's institutional vacuum and the exessive dirigisme of a machine appointed from above.

Fidel admitting difficulties to his people in July 26 speech

Fidel isn't one of those leaders who allow interviewers to express themselves at length the better to deal with them. He immediately grasped the import of my question and cried, polemically: "Aha! no hay instituciones, no hay instituciones! True, but listen . . ."

He rose and began a long defence of the past and present of the Cuban revolution: 'Do you know how many real revolutionaries there were in Cuba at the moment of revolution? Well, there wasn't even one per cent, note that — not even one per cent!

"We ourselves, the vanguard who had organized the guerrillas, what did we know about real revolution? And what means had we to bring it about?

"Well, I'll tell you: the people wanted the revolution because they hoped it would bring them higher wages and enough for all, immediately. We ourselves didn't really know the potentialities of the country and we had no powerful political organization at our disposal. We had to learn everything and create everything practically from scratch.

Small and Poor

"But we learned very quickly that this country was small, poor and underdeveloped, that it was in no position to fulfil the aspirations of our people quickly. In these circumstances were we to allow those who were better educated, more articulate and better organized than the others to profit from a proletarian democracy and grab the biggest slice of the national cake?

"Or was it better to explain to the people that, in order to have goods to distribute, we had to produce them collectively, and that we had to organize society in terms of the needs of the poorest and not those of the most eloquent?'

By nature Fidel finds it hard to stay in one place while he is talking. He shifts about incessantly, gets up, walks a few strides, sits down again, then paces the room anew as if the act of seeking to convince the other person is for him a kind of bodily combat.

He never takes his eyes off his 'adversary' and his quick brown eyes underline his words. He uses all the resources of an experienced lawyer: he knows how to confuse and to interrupt so as always to keep the initiative.

But he does it all in such a flagrant manner, with such apparent candor, that one finds it hard to hold it against him. He doesn't pretend to be infallible and he knows he has often changed his mind in the past. He disarms one by declaring with obvious sincerity: "How often we are mistaken!"

Inspire Workers

He told me that he detested the fig leaves devised by the European socialist countries to hide their "democratic nakedness." He didn't believe in the Soviet kind of elections, with a governmental single list receiving 99.999 per cent of the vote.

His idea was rather to continue the dialogue direct with the rank and file, to inspire the workers to create wealth together and to develop a socialist awareness from the great economic battle so that they might make a transitional leap forward to a new society in which there would be no money, no selfishness, no unhealthy competition.

After this "leap," the people themselves would know how to work out the institutions which suited them best. And to show that his idea was far from utopian, he quoted to me the figures of Cuba's enormous agricultural potential — its capacity to support not the present 8 million population but 60 million at least.

His optimism was a trifle contagious. His arguments about the progress to be made and the prospect of imminent transformation made one think that perhaps he was right, that all would sort itself out soon to the satisfaction of all and to the greater good of the Cuban socialist democracy.

I would not be quite truthful if I said that he completely convinced me, since the figures drawn from Cuban official sources made it plain that the situation was not exactly bright; and some experience of life in Havana enabled me to assess the dreadful drawbacks of rationing and the poverty which has existed in Cuba since 1961.

But it was reading Castro's speech of 26 July last that brought back to me the memory of our conversation at the experimental farm. For Castro had not made one of those sorties in the Nasser manner just to strengthen his support among the people. He spoke of his failure with the same sincerity with which he had told me two years ago of the imminence of his victory.

He had really believed that this "decisive effort' which he had demanded from his country would enable him not only to gather a record sugar harvest but also to win back confidence. But somewhere his plan went wrong and, having concentrated all responsibility in his own hands, he blames no one but himself.

However, sometimes good comes out of ill. Checking the balance sheet of this depressing harvest, Fidel came to the conclusion that present one-man system must no longer continue. He spoke of the need to reinforce the rank-and-file organizations and to build a national governmental machine with real power at both provincial and local levels.

Must Be Separate

He has sworn that this administrative framework must be separated from the party because the latter must not be charged with day-to-day administration. In short, even if he hasn't said very precisely how he will set about carrying out his new program he has for the first time shown a real interest in democratic socialism for Cuba.

Some have even concluded that he is going to give up the administrative tasks which until now have tied him down in order to concentrate more on the building up of the party and creation of new organs of government.

The Problem Grows and Grows

By NICHOLAS VON HOFFMAN

The names of two more young relatives of famous people may be added to those busted for grass. Robert F. Kennedy Jr. and R. Sargent Shriver III can now be added to the list that includes the son of the new Republican governor of New Jersey; the son of Walt Rostow, foreign policy adviser to President Johnson: the son of Yale University's president, Kingman Brewster; the brother-in-law of the mayor of Baltimore: the son of Sen. Ernest F. Hollings (D.—S.C.); the daughter of Sen. George McGovern (D.—S.D.); and the nephew of President Nixon's good and intimate friend, Bebe Rebozo.

The list could be extended ad infinitum. New names will be added all the time. Pot smoking is that ubiquitous. Marijuana is so widespread that it makes no difference whether a kid smokes it; unless he wants to abjure social intercourse with people his own age, he risks being busted for being in a place where somebody is possessing and puffing on the horrible hemp.

It is getting close to impossible to go to a party where most of the guests are under 35 — yes, 35, not 20 — and not find yourself keeping company with grass.

Since Mr. Nixon has taken office the incidence of grass smoking has grown exponentially. In no place does it appear that the per capita consumption is higher than in Washington, where it is endemic among younger government employees.

It's smoked on Capitol Hill; it's smoked within three blocks of the White House; it's smoked in the Watergate apartment complex, where the attorney-general of the United States lives.

On coming to power, the administration said it would end the dope by drying up the supply. In this, as in so many other matters, it has failed. There are many reasons for the failure, but most salient is that these people are inefficient and inept.

They come at you with organizational diagrams, the flip charts and flow charts; they speak phoney computer talk — inputs and outputs — and they affect a style of speech which is supposed to convey an impression of tough pragmatism.

Sometimes that makes for diverting entertainment but it's no substitute for judgment. Good judgment would have told them that eliminating grass was impossible and to waste their meagre intellectual resources trying to do it is counterproductive, to use their idioms. It's inefficient.

In many areas of government the stupidities are out of sight so that the people responsible don't look too bad. But grass is different. Not only does the National Institute of Mental Health have those silly commercials, but now the chief customs inspector is on the air apologizing for the delays caused by grass sleuths rummaging through travellers' baggage. They put on a big campaign against Mexico — remember Operation Intercept? — but all they do is advertise their inability to handle the problem or think it through.

While they're making this fuss, there's more grass around than ever. The August number of Scanlan's magazine carries an article by an ex-pot smuggler who estimates that last year alone 9,140,000 pounds of grass came across the border, which puts our interdiction record on the Rio Grande on a level with what we've done on the Ho Chi Minh Trail.

Not that success in Mexico would make that much difference. Untold grass tonnage is coming in from Vietnam and the rest of Southeast Asia, the principal exporters being the soldiers the administration won't send home.

And that source is nothing compared to what's grown here in America. Scanlan's reports so much grass is growing wild in Kansas that the professional pot harvesters there have formed an association in violation of the Sherman Anti-trust Act to maintain price levels by destroying part of the crop.

Not only is clandestine pot farming being carried on all over the country, but many people are at work developing higher yields, more potent strains so that good quality grass should be increasingly available at moderate prices. In addition to the thousands who're in this new industry for profit, there appears to be tens of thousands who grow pot at home for their own use. It's an indomitably hardy vegetable that grows anywhere, even in closets or basements. People plant it in flower pots, train an electric light on it and wait for high harvest.

It can't be stamped out. It must be legalized. The government has no more business telling people what they should smoke than what they should eat. The argument that it may be bad for you is beside the point. There's a lot of perfectly legal junk like liquor, tobacco and cold tablets which are bad for you.

In a free country the government should be forbidden to interfere with people's private lives this way unless it can be demonstrated that the practice is a threat to the state and the society. No such demonstration can be made in the case of pot; it would be easier with liquor, a form of dope that demonstrably causes the most terrible pain and trouble on a scale so wide we can't begin to measure it.

All of that's been said before, but it bears repeating. Less frequently adverted to are the beneficiaries of the present system. They are the crooked cops who clean up on bribes, the lawyers who profit from the fees for defending people for violating the drug laws, the blackmailers who can extort money from the prominent parents of young persons who smoke dope, and every serious felon on the loose, robbers, holdup men, rapists, muggers who get away because the police are busy catching the likes of 16-year-old Robert Kennedy Jr., who, before this incident, had a reputation for loving animals and studying zoology. Whoever arrested that boy ought to be ashamed of himself.

A Look at Middle Canada, Or Red Ensign Country

By GEORGE BAIN

Go wander around a place like Brandon on a mid-summer Sunday afternoon. The streets are treed with elm and ash and, particularly, Manitoba maples. Most places are either hedged or fenced and there are no driveways because the garages face on to the lane at the back.

The houses, most of them, are made of wood or stucco, and some of the big, big old ones, 50 or more years old, have wide, shady porches running across the front and down one side.

★ ★ ★

On a Sunday afternoon, people sit out in their gardens. (Sitting out in the garden is a different thing from, say, having a patio cookout, a folk-custom imported ready-made to suburbia from the plastic world of Doris Day, shredded wheat and permapress slax.)

In some of the gardens, they still grow hollyhocks at the side of the house, and big, beaming sunflowers.

This is a Canada miles and years apart from the Canada of Toronto-Dominion Centres, GO-Trains, Don Valley Parkways and stalagmite clusters of high-rise apartments.

There are a lot of Canadians who still inhabit this world — it is by no means a bad one — and their views on many things are as different from those of people in, say, the Golden Horseshoe around Lake Ontario, or in Montreal, as are their surroundings.

Look at Dauphin. In places like this, institutions which would be marginal at best in the big centres count for something in the life of the community — the Legion, the Elks, the IODE, the Ukrainian Choir, the Boys and Girls Band.

And the churches. During the Royal Tour there was an ecumenical church service at the fair grounds and the town turned out and packed a grandstand that the big city sophisticates would have smiled at. Most of the women wore hats and many of them gloves as well, although it was hot, and, with the Ukrainian Choir leading the way from its place down in front of the stand, everyone sang, really sang.

These towns and villages of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta are the places where the Diefenbaker Conservatives came from, and, for that matter, still do. It is evident when you talk to these people that there are many of them who still would be more than happy to follow John.

("Whatever became of that fellow, the one that was president of the Conservatives," a man said at a country elevator in Saskatchewan, "the one that organized things against John Diefenbaker? What's he doing now?")

These people are conservative, not in the way an oil man is conservative if he says that the high rates of income tax, going to spoonfeed the undeserving poor, are destroying his incentive to make another million dollars, but conservative about their institutions.

For instance, you find yourself noticing, with a sort of inner ping, how often when the talk turns to Ottawa that the term Dominion is still used. It isn't used for any sort of effect; it's simply the case that the Dominion Government, and the Dominion of Canada, are what those things always have been known as, and the terms remain perfectly good.

When Premier Ross Thatcher says that he is sick and tired of talk about the constitution, especially when there are so many other, more important things to talk about, he is not being merely beastly to his federal Liberal cousins; he's being representative.

Mr. Thatcher may not view matters quite so simply, but lots do: the Quebec question is simply politics, Quebec is playing the squeaking wheel (and there is even some admiration for how well it plays it). Quebec, far from being unique, is a province precisely like the rest, always allowing for the idiosyncratic notion of many of its people that they ought to speak French. The issue is one between Ottawa and Quebec City and doesn't deserve the attention it gets.

This, of course, is Red Ensign country — or was. It is also monarchist. In the Royal Canadian Legion Hall in Weyburn — a big hall, by the way, and a social centre of the community — the question of the future of the monarchy was raised, to test the reaction. It was as if the question had been, "Why summer?" Or something equally ridiculous.

A politician, or anyone else, may argue against some or all of the viewpoints of this Canada, but he is foolish to ignore or dismiss them.

Quote

From a column by Richard Needham in the Globe and Mail:

"The pattern of life in Western society does not permit people to become interested in children. While we North Americans talk a great deal about being a child-oriented society, we're markedly and dangerously neglectful of children.

"Architects plan houses so that parents cannot even see their children at play. North American children are disappearing from view and therefore from the social conscience.

No lead at all:

Shell will introduce a new non-leaded gasoline in October. New Shell Ultra is the latest step in our drive for good, clean mileage.

Six months ago the President of Shell Canada said, "We will have non-leaded gasoline available for the Canadian motorist when he needs it."

That promise will become a reality in October. Our new gasoline will be called Shell Ultra. It is formulated for the new 1971 cars and cars of the future.

Why make a gasoline with no lead?

Until now, lead has been a component in gasoline as an "anti-knock mix". For today's high compression cars, high octane leaded fuels are still needed.

However tomorrow's cars—starting with the new '71 models—will have new engines and will need new gasolines. Making gasoline without lead allows the automobile engine design to be changed. The result will be fewer emissions of carbon monoxide, hydrocarbons and particulates.

Shell Ultra will be specially formulated with no lead at all to meet these requirements.

Two of the trusted additives in Super Shell will also be in Shell Ultra—TCP* and a detergent.

By adding TCP to give valve protection we can formulate this new gasoline without any lead. The detergent helps keep the carburetor clean.

For cars of the future

In a few years, all new automobile engines will demand gasoline formulated with no lead at all. Shell will be ready this October to meet the motorists' needs for many years to come.

So if you see a little construction work around Shell stations, please bear with us. New Shell Ultra is on the way.

*T.M. Reg'd.

Strikers Meet

PRINCE ALBERT, Sask. (CP) — Striking workers met Thursday night to consider contract proposals aimed at ending their nine-day walkout at the Prince Albert Pulp Mill Co. Vern Bodenheimer, general manager of the mill, said in an interview that the two sides met Thursday afternoon and that the union wanted to meet separately to discuss proposals. The 325 strikers are represented by the International Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite and Papermill Workers' Union.

Pickets Return

EDMONTON (CP) — Picketing by members of the National Farmers Union has resumed at all United Grain Growers' facilities in an NFU campaign to halt marketing of creeping red fescue seed.

Bob Cheshire, NFU regional co-ordinator, said in a statement today the picket lines have dropped movement of the seed. The NFU wants 27 cents a pound for the product. The current price is about 15 cents.

The UGG obtained an injunction against the NFU for attempting to boycott their plants but the injunction was partly lifted in a court ruling Monday.

The NFU was served with a second injunction Monday by the Alberta Wheat Pool and Federal Grain Ltd. That injunction will be heard in Calgary today.

Strike Possible

BANFF, Alta. (CP) — Interference by the Saskatchewan government in negotiations could result in a strike by teachers Sept. 1, Stirling McDowell, general secretary of the Saskatchewan Teachers' Federation, said here Wednesday. He was here to address the Alberta Teachers Association conference.

Loan Sought

WINNIPEG (CP) — A multi-million-dollar paper mill at The Pas in northern Manitoba is attempting to borrow $3 million in working capital from Canadian banks and financial houses. Richard Krauss, president of MP Industrial Mills Ltd., told a press conference Thursday that the company needs the money to finance the mill's day-to-day operations until commercial production starts in February.

Voice Unlikely

WINNIPEG (CP) — Canada's municipal affairs ministers indicated Thursday they don't want local governments involved in constitutional matters. Howard Pawley, Manitoba's municipal affairs minister, said there was "less than enthusiastic response" to a brief presented to a meeting of the ministers Wednesday in which the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Reeves asked for a direct voice in federal-provincial talks on constitutional reform.

Hanuschak Sworn In

WINNIPEG (CP) — Ben Hanuschak, formerly speaker of the Manitoba legislature, was sworn in as consumer affairs minister Thursday. Hanuschak is the NDP member for Burrows. Until his appointment, the consumer affairs portfolio was handled by the attorney-general.

Thatcher Slams NDP Leader

REGINA (CP) — Premier Ross Thatcher Thursday charged the New Democratic Party with "placing politics before people" in its position on the nine-day-old Prince Albert pulp mill strike.

"It is interesting to note that in every labor dispute over the last few years, the NDP has taken the side of the strikers regardless of the merits or demerits of their case."

QUESTIONS

Thatcher said NDP leader Allan Blakeney, who Wednesday posed questions about financing of a planned $120 million mill at Meadow Lake, is "willing to risk the project for political gain."

The proposed mill would be located 130 miles northwest of Prince Albert and New York industrialist Karl F. Landegger says it might not go ahead if Prince Albert workers get big raises.

The NDP leader argued that the Meadow Lake project must be on shaky financial ground if "modest" wage increases to pulp mill workers could determine the fate of the scheme.

TAKES LONGER

Thatcher in a statement said, "Admittedly, it is a marginal project, because it takes 80 years to grow a tree in our north compared with 25 in British Columbia.

"The NDP knows that a second pulp mill complex in the north in five years for this government would look impressive indeed when compared with their own sorry record."

The premier said also it is well known that "some of the key agitators in the Prince Albert strike are prominent members of the Prince Albert NDP."

Adult Education Schedule Mailed

The 1970-71 adult education program of the Saanich Peninsula school district has been mailed to residents of the district this week.

More than 100 courses are being offered beginning the week of Sept. 14. Most courses cost about a dollar a class.

Some of the new courses outlined in the 10-page brochure are retail control systems, mathematics in business, household antique identification, cooking cabaret, yoga, and graphics and cartooning.

Although the program is designed primarily for adults, secondary school students over 15 years of age may register in any course. Old age pensioners may enrol for half the regular fee.

And Canada Manpower has agreed to sponsor eligible students in commercial courses that upgrade skills. Vocational counsellors will staff two free short courses to assist adults seeking employment.

The program last year had 77 courses and registered 1,152 students. Extra copies of the brochure are available at the school board office in Sidney.

Look world, I can parallel park

Let's not beat around the block, parallel parking is one of the worst things about driving.

If you can do that you can do anything. And a sure way to succeed is with a Datsun 1600.

A Datsun 1600 will make it where a big car can't. Because a big car's wheels may slip over the curb. Or a fin won't fit. Until, red-faced and humiliated, with all the traffic piling up behind you, you have to give up.

You see, a Datsun 1600 is so compact it fits in places bigger cars fear to tread. So easy to see out of, it's almost like being outside. (Even if you are a foot from the curb, it's still in line with other cars.) And you can park a lot too because Datsun 1600 gives you up to thirty-five miles per gallon of gas.

The 1600 also comes with a three-speed automatic transmission, so everything you do driving can look twice as nice. Automatically. Datsun 1600. There's a place for it.

Michener Reels and Stomps Through Northern Tour

By JOHN MIKA
Times Ottawa Bureau

COPPERMINE, NWT — While huskies howled into the gathering gloom of the barren lands outside, Governor-General and Mrs. Roland Michener let their hair down and kicked up their feels in the Eskomo community hall here Thursday night.

Where Samuel Hearne became the first European to stand on the Arctic Ocean's shoreline, the northern frontier burst every last vestige of state formality in the Governor-General's official centennial visit to the Northwest Territories.

Picture if you will the Governor-General of Canada and his wife stomping through a rousing, elbow-waving, heel and toe traditional native jig with 15-year-old Richard Kayogana and Greenlander Mrs. Lina Pedersen who won this dancing event three weeks ago at the Northern Summer Games in Inuvik.

It's called a gigaot and could become the rage at the next state ball in Government House if the Micheners' enthusiastic apprenticeship is any guide.

FAST-PACED

Esmond Butler, Michener's private secretary, said the spontaneous participatory fraternity by the vice-regal couple was unprecedented.

They danced the ancient but fast-paced jig in a small clearing fit for any downtown nightclub surrounded by almost 200 villagers crowded into a community hall barely 30 by 36 feet.

Moments later, the noise of chairs being stacked and cleared away was succeeded by the toe-tapping din of a violin, electric guitar, and two men clapping spoons like castanets.

Then they went through a quick-paced reel, changing partners frequently — at one moment the Governor-General was twirling with an Esmimo woman whose calf length parka was slapping away like a syncopated Mother Hubbard, while a few feet away a surprised red-coated Mountie on escort duty found himself dancing with Mrs. Michener.

SWEPT UP

The vice-regal couple were thoroughly relaxed and obviously swept up in a spontaneous wing-ding.

It was largely the result of Eskimo insistence on taking over all arrangements for an evening banquet during the tour's two-day stay in Coppermine.

Northwest officialdom was allowed to sit at the foot of the head table while Eskimo hosts and the entire assembly ate turkey off paper plates, many with their fingers, because the community hall didn't have enough silverware.

In a translated speech, Governor-General Michener told the Eskimos he had visited all parts of Canada, "but nowhere have we had a more delightful welcome than we had here tonight," he said.

FAMILY PARTY

"So let's enjoy ourselves and dance — I want to dance too."

Before his speech several Eskimos had spontaneously performed individual drum dances that set the tone of the evening as all laughed and clapped for their gyrations.

Mr. Michener recalled that as a young boy he had read in school books of Coppermine and the Coronation Gulf which he had seen for the first time Wednesday.

TAKES CANOE TRIP

Earlier in the afternoon Mr. Michener travelled by canoe up the Coppermine River to historic Bloody Falls, where he was unsuccessful in catching any fish.

But by accident he was able to see his first eaglets, a couple of young golden eagles, in a nest perched ten feet below the edge of a 65-foot-high cliff.

Mr. Michener leaned over the edge and watched the eaglets, while a nervous Mountie hovered behind him ready to grab.

By coincidence, the Coppermine community presented two unusual eagle carvings in soapstone to Mr. Michener at the dinner and his face beamed as he expressed his thrill.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS

Skies were mainly clear over B.C. early this morning but extensive low cloud and fog persisted along the west coast of Vancouver Island.

The ridge of high pressure over the coast will maintain sunny warm weather in most sections of the province through the weekend. However, there will be night and morning low cloud or fog along the west coast of Vancouver Island. A weakening Pacific disturbance will spread cloudiness over the northern mainland this afternoon. Partial clearing will occur behind this system on Saturday.

The Weather and You

By Carl Riblet Jr.

Just watch the kids in your neighborhood next time a storm front is on the way and you will observe a very interesting phenomenon, such as I witnessed at the community swimming pool down the road.

The children playing around the pool acted up a storm of their own. As the clouds got closer to us and the winds blew harder, the kids became wilder. You might say they acted like happy maniacs. They ran around like mad, hitting each other and chasing the smaller ones. They didn't mind a bit when I told them to cut it out right now and behave.

The reason for the unusual behavior was probably a matter of the electric weather. The kids calmed down a litlte when the storm broke. Whenever the weather changes abruptly and the barometric pressure goes down and the ionic charges in the air become positive instead of negative, children let themselves go and act up. Older folks are more restrained at such times, although we may feel like we had a big charge, too.

SENATE DISCUSSES FOREIGN TROOP FINANCING

Mercenary Pay Concerns Agnew Tour

By MICHAEL KRAFT

WASHINGTON (Reuters) — Vice-President Spiro T. Agnew's information-gathering mission to the Far East was of congressional concern today as the Senate continued its deliberations on the financing of troops fighting for the Cambodian and Laotian governments.

Senator J. William Fulbright has asked for restrictions on U.S. aid for Thai and South Vietnamese troops in Laos and Cambodia amid reports that Washington and Bangkok are on the verge of an agreement to send Thai troops into Cambodia to support the Lon Nol government.

South Vietnamese commanders also are reported to want to launch a major strike into Laos.

Agnew will confer with President Nixon at the western White House in San Clemente, Calif., Saturday before taking off for his 10-day Pacific visit to South Korea, Guam, Formosa, South Vietnam and Thailand.

His mission was not mentioned during Thursday's debate on American war assistance, and may not be today either, but congressional sources said the issue of American financing of the Cambodian and Laotian governments against North Vietnamese and Viet Cong attacks was certain to be part of Agnew's Asian discussions.

Aides to Senate leaders said that while Agnew's trip may not be pulled into floor debate, it was certain to carry weight as argument went on over Fulbright's amendment to ban the use of funds to support South Vietnamese or other troops providing military aid to Cambodia or Laos.

Fulbright, chairman of the Senate foreign relations committee, launched the debate by saying: "We don't want to get bogged down in another war like Vietnam again in Cambodia or Laos."

WARNS OF MOVE

He told the Senate: "There will be no winning of the war in Cambodia on the cheap, by paying foreign forces to do the fighting. Once the decision is made to try to save Cambodia by foreign troops, the die will be cast and our involvement—and our unwritten commitment to save Cambodia—escalated."

The state department recently acknowledged that a tentative agreement was reached with Thailand to send about 5,000 troops to support the Cambodian government.

The senate approved Thursday in a voice vote an amendment sponsored by Fulbright to stop the United States paying South Korean and Thai troops in South Vietnam larger overseas and combat allowances than those paid to U.S. forces there.

Fulbright said the highest special combat allowance for American forces in Vietnam is $65 a month while a Thai lieutenant gets $120 from the United States.

Meanwhile, the state department disclosed agreement had been reached with the Cambodian government on terms of a U.S. military assistance program for that hard-pressed Indochinese nation. But the amount and source of the funds were withheld pending consultations between the state department and the foreign relations committee.

GAMS MARCH AGAINST MIDISKIRTS

BOSTON — ABout 15 young women marched in front of the city's most fashionable clothing stores to protest the replacement of the miniskirt by the midi.

All members of the Girls Against Midis (GAMS), they said midcalf and longer skirts were an attempt by manufacturers to exploit some women's susceptibility to fashion trends.

All but one of the marchers had their hemlines far above the knee. She wore bell-bottomed slacks.

New York Jumps 15.81

Strapping gain of 15.81 points was chalked up by the industrial index in active trading today on the New York Stock Exchange. The advance boosted the average up to 745.41. Over 13 million shares were traded.

Investors reacted after U.S. Treasury Secretary David Kennedy said late Thursday that the nation has already passed through its most difficult period of transition.

Under pressure from Wall Street the Toronto industrials also enjoyed an upswing with the index ahead 1.00 points. Strongest sectors were food processors, oil refining, pipelines and trust and loans.

AT TORONTO in industrials, Dome Pete rose 5 to 59½, Chrysler 2¼ to 21⅛, Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas 1⅛ to 40, Consolidated Bathurst 1½ to 11½ and B.C. Forest 1¼ to 25¼.

Falconbridge lost 1 to 131.

Hudson Bay Mining climbed ⅝ to 20⅝, Northgate ¼ to 10½, Bankeno 25 cents to $4.15 and Granisle ⅛ to 13⅛. Sherrit lost ⅛ to 17¾, Opemiska ¼ to 11⅝, Brunswick 15 cents to $4.80 and Pine Point ⅛ to 33⅞.

Canadian Tricentral rose $2 to $8.50, Canadian Superior Oil 1⅞ to 35&, Great Plains 1 to 26, United Canso 80 cents to $4.70 and Ranger ⅝ to 10⅜.

AT NEW YORK winning issues led losers by a margin of more than 3 to 1.

Prices included Pennzoil United, up 1 at 23, General Motors, up 3⅛ at 71⅝, and Telex, up ⅝ to 9⅞.

AT MONTREAL prices on the stock market slipped lower in active early afternoon trading today.

MacMillan-Bloedel was off ¾ to 25¼, Bank of Nova Scotia ¼ to 18¾, Ivaco ⅛ to 7⅜ and Chemcell 20 cents to 4.25.

Among senior mines and oils, Falconbridge Nickel was ahead 1 to 133, Inco ⅛ to 40½, Shell Canada ⅛ to 29, Gulf Oil Co. ½ to 15c, Texaco Canada ½ to 24½, Northern and Central Gas ⅝ to 12½ and Aquitaine ¼ to 23¼.

Famous Players moved up 1½ to 10, Consolidated-Bathurst 1⅛ to 11¼, Alcan Aluminium ½ to 20⅞, Canadian Breweries ⅜ to 7⅞, Central Del Rio ⅝ to 10c, and Moore Corp. ⅝ to 29.

CPR advanced ¼ to 58 and Bell Canada ⅛ to 42⅛.

AT LONDON return of small buyers in mid-session on yield considerations today turned the stock market around and gains of ⅛ points replaced losses of ¼.

Industrials moved narrowly with no decisive trend being established. Prices generally tended lower on lack of interest.

Dome gained 9 points at 146 while Pacific Petroleum, Hollinger, Inco, Canadian Pacific and Brascan were among other Canadians to advance. Banks were also firm.

TODAY'S GRAIN PRICES

WINNIPEG (CP) — All commodities followed an easier price pattern on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange today, with all futures closing lower.

Declines were attributed largely to a more accurate report of the U.S. corn damage which indicated earlier reports were exaggerated.

Pit operations were quiet most of the day with commission houses on both sides of the market the main activity.

Canadian wheat exports Thursday consisted of 509,600 bushels to China and 44,527 to Japan.

Lakehead prices for class two and IGA wheat all were unchanged.

100,000-Hour Life For New Car Engine

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — Inventor Wallace Minto says his Freon-powered, pollution-fighting auto engine will run 100,000 hours, more than 50 times the life of the conventional internal combustion engine.

Minto, president of Kinetics Corp., announced earlier this week the signing of a contract with Nissan Motor Co., Ltd., of Japan, manufacturer of the Datsun automobile.

He said in an interview that about 100 of the engines will be placed in Datsun automobiles in 1972 for a year of highway testing.

The engine is much the same as the steam engines which powered such famous cars as the Stanley Steamer early in the century.

But it uses Freon instead of water to provide steam and Minto said he can get about three times as much horsepower from his engine as from an equivalent water steam engine.

"Our engine has only two moving parts, helical gears that turn when high pressure Freon is squirted against them," Minto said. "There's no transmission or drive shaft, so we save a great deal of weight there.

"You can use any kind of fuel to heat the boiler, but we prefer kerosene because it has no lead and emits very few pollutants."

Freon is a liquid chemical manufactured by DuPont Co. It flows into the boiler controlled by a solid state computer the size of a pack of cigarettes. Here it is converted to gas to be driven against the helical gears, then converted back to liquid through a condenser and used again.

Minto said the first production models probably will cost a good bit more than present Datsuns, but he added: "When we start mass producing these engines at a million a year or so, they should cost 10 to 20 per cent less than present cars. They're easier to make. . . .

"One possibility we're looking at is selling an engine and chassis, and letting the buyer replace the Fiberglas body every year or so."

Treasury Bills

OTTAWA (CP) — New 91-day Government of Canada treasury bills auctioned Thursday: $150 million at an average price and yield of 98.617 and 5.62 per cent. Last week, same amount and term, 98.593 and 5.72 per cent. 182-day: $40 million at 97.175 and 5.83 per cent. Last week, same amount and term, 97.121 and 5.94 per cent.

Bowater

Better showing by the North American interests of Bowater Paper Corp. helped the London-based company improve its profits in the first six months compared with the same period of 1969.

The firm's profit before tax in the 1970 period was $24.75 million and the after-tax figure was $12.75 million, compared with 1969 levels of $23.5 million and $12 million respectively.

The company says it has had an unexpected setback in the floating Canadian dollar.

Dominion Textile

Dominion Textile Ltd. reports net earnings of $4.6 million or $1.76 a common share for the fiscal year ended June 30, down from $5 million or $1.93 a share in the corresponding period last year.

Total sales for the period were $167 million compared with $173 million last year.

The company said the 3.1-per-cent drop in sales resulted from "hesitancy" of the economy and stiff competition by imported textile goods from low-cost countries.

Kelly-Deyong

Kelly-Deyong Sound Corp. Ltd. reported in advance of its annual meeting a net loss of $37,981 for the year ended Feb. 28, its first year of operation as a public company.

In the report to shareholders, board chairman C. W. Kelly attributed the loss to lower profits from the sale of merchandise and to administrative costs incurred by consolidating the six companies which form the corporation.

Union Oil

Union Oil Co. of Canada Ltd. had net earnings of $2.68 million or 56.1 cents a share in the first half of 1970, compared with $3.95 million or 82.5 cents a share for the first six months of 1969.

Cash flow increased slightly to $9.96 million compared with $9.9 million.

President W. E. Farrar said the primary cause for lower earnings was an increase in expenses for more active and extensive exploration.

Canadian GE

Canadian General Electric Co. Ltd. reports a 24 per cent decline in earnings for the first half of the year, due mainly to a sharp drop in sales of consumer products.

Profit for the six months was $4.36 million or 53 cents a share, down from $5.74 million or 70 cents a share.

The company said there were also substantial losses associated with closing of color TV tube manufacturing operations.

Sales for the six months were $227.75 million, up 4 per cent from $219 million for the first half of 1969.

Pinto Joins U.S. Threat To The Bug

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Ford Motor Co. unveiled its sub-compact Pinto Thursday as American auto-makers step up their challenge to Volkswagen and other imports from the growing small-car market.

Henry Ford II, board chairman of Ford Motor Co., said 400,000 of the sporty Pintos will be sold the first year and that it will outsell Volkswagen during that time.

The Pinto is the third American sub-compact to challenge the imports that racked up more than 1,000,000 sales in the United States last year, mostly with cars smaller than American compacts.

American Motors got a five-month jump when it introduced its sub-compact Gremlin in April. All 25,000 of the original Gremlins have been sold, and American Motors now is preparing a new model.

General Motors has taken the wraps off its subcompact Vega and will put it into Chevrolet showrooms Sept. 10, a day before the Pinto goes on sale.

Prices for the Pinto and Vega have not been announced, but spokesmen said they will be near the $1,850 price tag on the Volkswagen. The Gremlin sells for $1,879.

The Pinto has a longish hood and short afterdeck fashioned after Ford's Mustang. It is available in only a two-door model.

Compromise Plan Would End IOS Fight

NEW YORK (WP) — A compromise plan which would return Bernard Cornfeld to the board of directors of Investors Overseas Services but keep control of the teetering mutual fund giant in the hands of the present management, is being proposed to head off a proxy fight between the two factions.

Under the proposal, Cornfeld, who was deposed as chairman of IOS in mid-May, would also become chairman of the Geneva-based company's sales subsidiary, with complete authority to rebuild the shrinking sales arm. IOS now has less than 6,000 salesmen around the world, compared with a high of more than 15,000 earlier this year.

Sir Eric Wyndham White, who replaced Cornfeld as chairman in the management shake-up, would retain that post. White, who has just left New York after meetings with bankers and Wall Street brokers, is said to be strongly opposed to any compromise which would remove him from that post.

Neither side has given a final answer to the proposal. Reached by telephone at his Geneva home, Cornfeld said Thursday he might compromise, but added that he would also have to become a member of IOS' executive committee and that the company would have to drop its proposed affiliation with International Controls Corp., of Fairfield, N.J. ICC President Robert Vesco has met with Cornfeld, but has failed to win him over.

Sources close to the company say the strength of the compromise plan lies in the fact that both Cornfeld and White are unsure of their ability to win a proxy fight. Cornfeld claims to have proxies for more than 25 million preferred shares, but that is still short of the two-thirds majority needed to unseat the present board and return him to power. IOS has about 41 million preferred shares outstanding, although only about 33 million were voted at the annual meeting on June 30. Preferred shareholders, who are mostly IOS salesmen and other insiders, elect 18 of the company's 27 directors.

Many Stockholders Take Court Action

NEW YORK (AP) — More and more stockholders are turning to the courts in an effort to recoup some of the losses they've suffered during a 21-month bear market, legal experts report.

"The fact that they've taken a beating in the market during the last year and a half definitely has led to the increasing number of suits against brokerage houses and corporations," said Stanley K. Kaufman, a New York lawyer who has handled many stockholder actions.

Some experts in securities law estimate that several hundred stockholder suits have been filed across the United States.

Alan R. Bromberg, a professor at Southern Methodist University who specializes in securities law, says:

"With major companies going under there is going to be a tremendous number of new suits against anybody who's got any money left."

Although the legal experts say the declining market and recent brokerage house failures gave impetus to new stockholder litigation, the liberal interpretation of federal securities laws and regulations by the courts is cited by some as an important contributing factor.

MORE EXPECTED

In Houston recently, a judge held that the trustee for a company reorganizing under the federal bankruptcy laws has the authority to sue the principals on behalf of all the stockholders.

"I think you're going to see much more of this where the trustees are trying to recover for the shareholders and the company when the insiders have manipulated the stock," Bromberg said.

Recently a New York man sued a brokerage house for "churning" his account. Churning, or excessive trading in order to earn commissions, has been illegal for many years but legal sources said recovery in the past usually was limited to the amount of commissions.

In this case, however, the judge observed that "horses would have given the plaintiff a fairer opportunity to realize on his investment," and the man was awarded the full amount of his losses.

A growing number of suits are being brought under a section of the 1934 Federal Securities Act, which provides for forfeiture of profits realized on the "short swing," that is, the purchase and sale of securities by company insiders in a period of less than six months.

Under this section the insider who makes a profit on "in-and-out" transactions in his company's securities is assumed to be using corporate information that hasn't been disclosed to the public and the profit, therefore, belongs to the corporation. A "sale" might simply be the exchange of shares in a corporate merger.

RUMBLINGS OF DISCONTENT

Heath's Honeymoon Ending

LONDON (CP) — The first faint rumblings of discontent within the governing Conservative party about the performance of Prime Minister Heath's administration are becoming evident at the grassroots level and elsewhere.

Robert McCrindle, a backbench Conservative MP, warned Thursday night that the "honeymoon" period of the Heath government following the June 18 general election will be over in a few weeks.

Already "some discontent" can be heard in the constituencies because a new approach to Britain's economic problems has not yet made itself apparent, McCrindle said.

"My post bag is full (of letters) about price increases, real or threatened, mainly affecting the nationalized industries," he added.

As McCrindle spoke, more such increases, this time affecting some tickets on the nationalized British railways, were being announced.

They followed controversy this week in London concerning rises in fares charged by the capital's transit system.

Meanwhile, Heath himself has been on holiday in various parts of the country, amid continuing public nervousness about labor unrest as well as about the economy generally.

He returned to his official home at 10 Downing Street in London Thursday to do paper work but was expected to leave again today for a further period of participation in his favorite sport, sailing.

But the new round of sailing extends into next week and Heath's holiday period now has been under way since the beginning of August.

The pro-Conservative Daily Sketch today takes editorial note of the prime minister's vacation time and says that "he has deliberately refused to rush back to London and go through empty motions of frantic activity."

"That was (former prime minister) Harold Wilson's style and Mr. Heath despises it," says The Sketch.

But it also argues that "Britain is in a mess and a lot of people . . . are worried because the government seems to be doing so little about it."

Heath already has been warned by Conservative MP John Hunt of possible revolts against the government if proposed increases in postal charges are implemented.

SUDSY SECRET UNCAPPED

In a year of secret drinking he got through 2,666 bottles of his firm's beer. Every time he drank a bottle, Sullivan carefully replaced the cap and put the empty back in stock.

His illicit drinking spree was discovered when for the first time in five years he failed to report to work, and the hoard of empties was found.

"I drank all the beer my self over a period after my wife's death," Sullivan explained in court Thursday. He pleaded guilty to stealing the beer and was ordered held over on bail for probation reports.

MEXICO BORDER SETTLED AT LAST

PUERTO VALLARTA, Mexico (AP) — Meeting in an atmosphere of fiesta, Presidents Nixon and Gustavo Diaz Ordaz agreed Thursday night to end 122 years of U.S.-Mexican border disputes resulting from the shifting Rio Grande.

They hoped to end territorial controversy forever between their two nations by setting the boundary between Texas and Mexico in the centre of the Rio Grande.

"Two people married by geography should have no problems in delineating our borders," Diaz Ordaz told reporters.

Since the end of the war between Mexico and the United States in 1848, the constant shifting of the Rio Grande has generated endless squabbling by putting small parcels of land first in one country and then in the other.

After the presidential announcement, White House Press Secretary Ronald Ziegler told reporters the two governments had worked out a system of "compensating factors" which would come into play whenever the river bed shifts.

Italian Holidays Have Shopper on Warpath

ROME (AP) — Rome and Milan are faced with a shoppers' revolt, because their favorite neighboring shopkeepers have hung up a closed-for-holidays sign and vanished to the nearest beach.

"The music is always the same: Closed for holidays," says Rome's Communist newspaper Paese Sera. "The pork butcher has betrayed you and your grated cheese has moved 200 metres down the street to another shop.

"But in the process, you have to walk a kilometre for milk—in the other direction."

"This is the consequences of giving vacations to everyone in the space of one or two weeks," says Milan's independent Cordiere Della Sera. "Sometimes the vegetable man just shuts down on his own, unilaterally, leaving the consumer high and dry."

At the root of the shutdowns is the lack of staggered vacations in Italy, and growing agitation from shopkeepers for a short work week. Most neighborhood shops stay open six days a week. And it is not infrequent to see shoppers sneaking under a half-closed shutter on Sunday morning for a bottle of olive oil or some fresh pasta.

In Milan, the prefect—governor—decided Monday morning would serve as the weekly holiday. Another purpose of the holiday is to save overtime pay to employees, whose recent labor contract has reduced work to 5½ days a week.

Despite the new contract, the shopkeepers association says, employees in Italy work longer hours than in New York, Paris, Moscow, Brussels and Bonn. Employees currently work 43 hours a week, and will not be down to 40 hours until 1973.

WARSAW PACT SUMMIT MEETING

Bonn-Moscow Treaty Hailed

MOSCOW (Reuters) — Leaders of the seven Warsaw pact countries hailed the new Soviet-West German non-aggression pact and said today it represents a major step toward relaxing European tension.

Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Hungary, Poland, Romania and the Soviet Union made the declaration in a communique after their one-day summit in Moscow Thursday.

The communique, published by the Soviet news agency Tass, said the Bonn-Moscow talks and the signing of the treaty nine days ago were "a major step on the road towards relaxation of the tension and normalization of the situation in Europe."

The Kremlin's partners approved the new treaty slightly more than a week after West German Chancellor Willy Brandt flew to Moscow to sign the accord renouncing the use of force and respecting the inviolability of existing European frontiers.

The five-hour meeting Thursday reviewed the non-aggression treaty's implications for the Communist alliance and latest prospects for a European security conference.

The communique said the leaders "expressed firm intention to take further steps . . . aimed at strengthening European security."

It added they would take active measures "for implementation in the nearest future of the proposal on convocation of an all-European security conference . . . which is enlisting ever wider support."

A European conference to fulfill Warsaw pact aims could serve to enhance East Germany's status and further consolidate on a European scale the positions reached in bilateral negotiation between Bonn and Moscow.

Observers said that East German party chief Walter Ulbricht who attended the summit, likely will seek further support among his allies for his campaign for full recognition of East Germany by the non-Communist world.

Fatal Sub Crash Probed by French

TOULON, France (Reuters) — Naval officials began an official inquiry today into the collision between a French and a South African submarine that killed six French sailors and injured four others.

The collision Thursday night about a mile from shore during Mediterranean naval exercises left a 40-foot-long hole in the side of the French submarine Galatee, which was later beached.

The South African submarine Maria van Riebeeck, sold to South Africa by France July 24 amid international protests, returned to port under its own power with no injuries reported.

The 850-ton Maria van Riebeeck, South Africa's first submarine was returning to port when it collided with the Galatee, which was heading out to sea.

A defence ministry spokesman said both vessels were on the surface, but gave no other details. Unconfirmed reports said there was an explosion aboard one of the submarines before the collision.

A French Navy spokesman said attempts would be made today to refloat the Galatee. Tugs and a salvage ship already were at the site.

The South African submarine was handed over at the Atlantic port of Lorient amid an international storm over supplies of arms to the republic, which practises apartheid (race segregation).

The 850-ton submarine is one of three ordered from France which will form the nucleus of a South African force to guard the sea route around the Cape of Good Hope.

Both the Maria van Riebeeck and the Galatee, completed in 1964, belong to the Daphne Class designed for anti-submarine warfare.

BILL WALKER

Be careful what you say, now. That fellow sitting next to you may be a budding author. It's the fashion now to listen, while you work, then go home and tell it all to a tape recorder.

Later, you sort it all out, throw away the culls, and keep the juicy bits.

The juicier the better, because now perhaps the product will be marketable. Who knows?

This is the modern-day approach to the old diarist routine —what-did-I-do-today? But with a difference. Keep notes on the other guy. The average sports fan would dearly love to know how the other half—his hero—lives. Heresay is so commonplace, the second-hand info is worse. It leaves too much to the imagination. It isn't fair to the athlete.

But not any more. Everybody is writing from the top—from inside the dressing room door, and the hotel bedroom, too.

The fellow who tells a dirty story is taped, and so is his bawdy tale. The guy who slugged the coach at midnight may have thought they were alone, until he reads it in print a few months later, or even the next day. The martini tab will likely be accurate, but then so will the girlie count.

Everybody's busy taking notes, and not only keeping them, but putting them in type, for all to see.

There has been a flood on the market. The book shelves are bulging. Nobody is being spared. And the words are not all complimentary. Rather, the reverse is usually the theme.

●

The stars themselves are not necessarily happy with the printed word. They feel it is an invasion of privacy. Personalities, yes, but personal issues, no. That's the yardstick they would like to be measured by. Their misdeeds are nobody's business but their own.

And why diminish the light of a hero? Aren't they part of the game? and doesn't everybody want a star to look up to? So why knock them in this fashion?

Sure, it could be a sad commentary on the times in which we live, but it's the in-thing in print, and if sports have suffered because of it, it hasn't been noticed at the box office, or at the book stores.

Dick Young, a New York columnist, called Jim Bouton a "social leper" for his publication "Ball Four." But Ball Four is high on the best seller list, and the author has quit baseball.

Bouton doesn't need the extra work, now. He's got what he wanted, even if he couldn't get the side out. There was no pressure on him to stay.

Bill Freehan, the Detroit catcher, had Denny McLain pegged before the commissioner of baseball got to suspend McLain for consorting with undesirables. Freehan, in his book, had told some tales that didn't need telling, and which didn't enhance McLain's social standing either.

●

Sugar Ray Robinson, in his book, "Sugar Ray," told stories on himself, which is considered legitimate, but also on former heavyweight champion Joe Louis, which is deemed beyond the pale.

But does anyone really care how many women a guy slept with?

Johnny Sample, the football player, has come out with his revue: Confessions of a dirty ballplayer. I haven't read it, but Sample was on TV the other night laughing gaily as he explained the charges he had made. He wasn't running scared. He was calling players "dirty" by name, so I imagine the book does the same.

Bouton's expose, it was exerpted in Look, hits at one of baseball's heroes. Mickey Mantle drank too much, he says. Now everybody knows that many ball players drink. It's a long season to go dry. But the way Bouton puts it, Mantle did it in such a way that it affected his play. Which is a knock at a hero. And Mantle also pushed away little kids who wanted autographs, which is what people remember. Perhaps he did, but he didn't push them away all the time, which they don't remember.

So, sure the kids who read these books are going to be impressed. But in which way? Will they accept them in full stride with their way of life? Or will they get the wrong impression of all heroes?

Personally, I doubt if they will be permanently damaged. A seat near a baseball dugout is almost as good as reading the book. At least the language is the same. And if the youngsters are old enought to see all that other social garbage on TV (and not in sports primarily) they are old enough to read the books, and make up their own mind. If they haven't already blown them doing something else.

And, too, they are probably more aware of things present than their parents realize, or want to.

There was a crack in SI the other day that kids reading "Ball Four" shouldn't ask their mothers to explain some of the words they might come across.

So are the books.

Kicks For 15 Points; Defence Plays Key Role

VANCOUVER (CP) — A defence that was tough when it had to be and place-kicker Ted Gerela were the key factors Thursday night as British Columbia Lions thrilled their largest home-town crowd in five years by beating Calgary Stampeders 27-13.

Gerela kicked four field goals—including shots of 52, 46, and 38 yards—plus a single and converts on touchdowns by fullback Jim Evenson and halfback A. D. Whitfield as 35,627 Lions fans roared.

The victory moved Lions into a second-place tie in the Western Football Conference with Calgary—two points behind Saskatchewan Roughriders — and gained a measure of revenge for a 16-9 loss to the Stampeders at Calgary Aug. 10.

Lions' defence picked off four passes by Calgary quarterback Jerry Keeling, the West's leading passer, and stiffened to stop two of five third-down gambles at crucial moments.

Keeling, badgered all night by defensive linemen Bill Whisler, John Stucky and Wayne Dennis, was frequently off the mark with his passing, completing 12 of 30 attempts.

"Those fans saw the hardest hitting game they're ever going to see," said Lions coach Jackie Parker afterwards. "Our guys just stuck everybody they saw."

He also lauded Calgary's superlative linebacker, Wayne Harris:

"He must have made a thousand tackles."

Stamps Charged in Front Early

Robinson kicked a 29-yard field goal on Calgary's first sequence of plays to give the Stamps the lead for the only time in the game.

Lions went ahead to stay later in the first quarter, marching 57 yards in five plays for the touchdown. Evenson swept 13 yards around left end to complete the drive, which featured a 14-yard pass from quarterback Paul Brothers to Whitfield, a 22-yard scamper by Brothers and a 12-yard crack by Whitfield.

A 43-yard pass play from Brothers to flanker Rhome Nixon set the stage for Gerela's 52-yard field goal mid-way in the third quarter. He added a 21-yard three-pointer early in the fourth.

Then Lions' hyperactive pass defence contributed to Calgary's only touchdown as defenders Jerry Bradley and Rich Robinson were called for interference on two consecutive plays. The penalties netted the Stampeders 43 yards and a first down on the B.C. three-yard line. McKinnis cracked over on the first try.

The score was 17-13 for Lions when Keeling, attempted to pick up five yards on a third-down roll-out, was stopped a yard short, turning the ball over to Lions at the Calgary 47.

POLES GRABBED PASS

On Calgary's first play following the field goal, linebacker Greenard Poles intercepted Keeling's pass and rambled 47 yards to the Calgary one-yard line.

Whitfield plunged over and Gerela converted to put it out of Calgary's reach.

Calgary had the statistical edge, making 21 first downs, 181 yards rushing and 154 passing, for a net offence of 335 yards. Lions had 16 first downs, 183 yards passing and 147 on the ground, a net of 330.

NO INTERCEPTIONS

Brothers completed nine of his 16 passes, with no interceptions.

Evenson picked up 65 yards on 14 carries to give him a total of 378 yards for the season, second in the west only to George Reed of Saskatchewan, who has 402. Whiefield picked up 56 yards and is third in the west with 259. McKinnis caught three passes for 51 yards and Leo Taylor had 57 yards rushing.

EDGE TAMPA BY ONE RUN . . . . . . IN WORLD SERIES BATTLE

Victoria Colts Win Opener

LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Victoria All-Stars stepped forward as strong contenders for the title here Thursday as they won their first game in Colt League baseball World Series competition.

Representing Canada for the second successive year, the Victorians came from behind to defeat the southern champions from Tampa, Fla., 3-2 in their first start in the eight-team, double-loss-elimination event.

Last year, the Canadians were bounced out of the series as they lost both their starts.

Ray Andre blasted a sixth-inning triple to supply both the tying and winning runs Thursday while pitcher Dave Anderson made some spectacular recoveries to record a four-hit victory.

After walking the first batter and allowing the next to hit a triple, Anderson settled down to some serious pitching.

His clubmates helped ease the danger by turning a squeeze bunt into a double play. Anderson grabbed the ball and threw it to catcher Tom Craig, who tagged the incoming runner and sent the bunter back to the dugout with a perfect throw to second base.

Anderson ended the inning with a strikeout and was only in trouble once more in the game when he allowed a run in the third inning.

A one-out single by Anderson in the fifth inning started Victoria down the comeback trail. Mike Lee bunted and Anderson reached home when the third-baseman threw too high trying to catch Lee at first.

In the sixth-inning rally, Derrick Fuller drew a base on balls as did pinch-hitter Fred King, after Randy Johnson had bunted Fuller to second base.

Victoria next plays the winner of a meeting between Covina, the western champions from California, and the host Lafayette club on Saturday.

Other clubs in the series are Hagerstown, Md. (eastern champions); San Juan (Latin-American champions); Hawaii (Pacific champions), and Springfield, Ill. (northern champions).

DOCTORS HAVE DOUBTS BRIERE WILL RECOVER

MONTREAL (CP) — Doctors are beginning to doubt whether Michel Briere, rookie centre of Pittsburgh Penguins of the National Hockey League, will regain consciousness, a hospital spokesman said Thursday.

Briere, 20, has been in a coma since suffering head injuries in an auto accident May 15 near his home town of Malartic, in northwestern Quebec.

His condition has remained stationary for the last month and he has had only "very elementary reactions" to physiotherapy, the spokesman said.

No-Punch Eskies Nipped by Argos

TORONTO (CP) — Coach Leo Cahill didn't think his Toronto Argonauts should have been so close to losing their Canadian Football League contest with Edmonton Eskimos Thursday night.

"We almost lost and we shouldn't have lost," said Cahill after his Argos stumbled off the field with a 16-14 win that gave them second place in the Eastern Conference, two points behind Montreal Alouettes and two ahead of Hamilton Tiger-Cats.

Despite playing their fourth game in eight days with only two day's rest from the last one, the Eskimos equalled the Argos in yards gained with 323 and in first downs with 17.

But six consecutive tries for a touchdown from inside the Toronto 10-yard line in the third quarter failed to produce a single Edmonton point and the Argos held on for the victory.

Cahill, while not going so far as to criticize game officials for the nine penalties for 58 yards lost against the Argos, called it a "remarkable coincidence" that Edmonton was not called for a single penalty.

The Argos got their points on two touchdowns and two singles. Quarterback Don Jonas passed to flanker Tom Bland for one, and Tom Wilkinson hit flanker Jim Thorpe for the other.

Edmonton scored first in the second quarter on a pass from quarterback Don Trull to Tom Nettles. Trull scored the second touchdown when he plunged over from the one.

Both touchdowns were converted by Dave Cutler who missed on two field goal attempts, one from the 51-yard line in the second quarter and a 53-yard try in the final minutes.

Trull was good on 17 of 38 passes for 286 yards. But the Eskimos could muster only 51 yards on the ground as compared to 160 by the Argos.

Reluctant Pair Leads Balding by One Stroke

BRANTFORD, Ont. (CP) — Two reluctant golfers from nearby Copetown share the lead after 18 holes of the Canadian Professional Golfers' Association tournament.

Bob Rose of the Beverly club and Bill Thompson, representing Windsor Park, fired 68s Thursday to take a one-stroke lead over Toronto's Al Balding in the $25,000 tournament that winds up after 72 holes Sunday.

In at 70 were Bruce Murray of St. Catharines, Ont., and Gary Bowerman of Toronto. Sharing 71s were John Henrick of Brampton, Ont., Bob Breen of Malton, Ont., Ken Girard of Oakridges, Ont., Ken Steeves of Ridgeway, Ont., and Edmonton's Bill Wright Jr.

Neither Rose nor Thompson was optimistic about their chances of putting together four good rounds in their quest for the $5,000 first-prize money.

Thompson said he was sure before the tournament he could put together one good round.

WINDS ARE FACTOR

He added, however, that if winds of 17 to 20 miles an hour that swept the course Thursday continue, par golf could win the 1970 CPGA.

Moe Norman of Gilford, Ont., a pre tournament favorite, was among the last in. After a front nine 34, he registered a 40 on the homecoming nine and a score of 74.

Just ahead of him was defending CPGA champ Bob Cox Jr. of Richmond, B.C., who finished with a 75.

Rose said those who place the pins will probably make things a lot tougher for today's 18 holes, after which the low 100 and ties will qualify for play Saturday and Sunday.

Three Western Canada entries —Dick Munn of Vancouver, Bill Wakeham of Victoria and Winnipeg's Wilf Homenuik—were in a big group at 72.

Vaughan Trapp of Victoria placed in a group at 73 while Dick Silverberg of Sidney, who fired a 71 in the bonus tournament Wednesday, slipped to 80.

Puck Stars Golf Pros For Taking Cash Prizes

TORONTO (CP) — Sixteen professional hockey players have been stripped of their amateur golf status for accepting cash prizes in the American Airlines tournaments of 1969 and 1970, it was announced Thursday.

Among those affected by the Royal Canadian Golf Association ruling are Frank Mahovlich and Gary Bergman of Detroit Red Wings who won this year's tournament, and Gump Worsley and Bobby Baun, the 1969 winners.

Each of the four players won $2,500, and Mahovlich also accepted a car for driving closest to the flag on the 16th hole in the recent tournament at the Toronto Board of Trade club.

Mahovlich and Bergman donated half their winnings to Variety Village as did the other top six teams.

Bill Hicke and Harry Howell of Oakland Seals, who finished second and Mike Walton and Jim McKenny of Toronto Maple Leafs, who finished fifth, in this years tournament were also affected by the ruling.

AGAINST PRO FOOTBALL CONNIVANCE CHARGED

Kapp's Lawyer Talks of Suit

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (AP) — The News quotes a lawyer for Joe Kapp of Minnesota Vikings as saying the quarterback may sue professional football if the National Football League club doesn't meet Kapp's demand for a reported $1,000,000 contract.

Kapp's lawyer, John Cook, speculated on a possible trip to court in an interview with the San Antonio News Thursday.

"It's probably no news to you that the football establishment is in bed with one another," the 72-year-old lawyer said.

"They have gentlemen's agreements and all sorts of friendly arrangements to protect each other.

"Now if Joe is unable to play football because of those tactics — there's no escape from it . . . they will be confronted with a multimillion dollar anti-trust and fraudulent connivance suit," Cook said.

He was asked if this means Kapp will sue if the Vikings don't meet his salary demands.

"Oh, yes," Cook said. "Joe wants to play.

"But so far as Minnesota is concerned, he's been vilified in the press, they have made every effort in the Viking-controlled press to hurt him."

Cook continued: "They have tried to drive a wedge between him and his fellow players . . . but the more they do this the stronger our case becomes.

"The individuals responsible for this — and I'm not just talking about the Viking management now — will have to answer for it."

Slugging by Pitchers Aids Yankees, Braves

By The Associated Press

Stottlemyre took his frustrations out against Minnesota, ripping a two-run, seventh-inning triple that enabled the New York Yamkees to beat the Twins, West Division leaders of the American League, 4-3 Thursday night.

Reed, Atlanta's tall curveballer, drilled a run-scoring single in the middle of a three-run second inning as the Braves trimmed the Philadelphia Phillies 6-2 in the only other major league game.

Reed also came out with a no-decision in an exchange of blows with teammate Rico Carty prior to Wednesday night's game, the Atlanta Journal reported.

By STEWART LANG

Following the usual late-summer pattern, salmon fishing action warmed up in many Vancouver Island locations in the past week while, as is also normal in August, trout anglers continue to work hard for their catches.

Spring salmon up to the 30:12-pounder caught by Ron Ekstrom earlier this week near Goldstream Island have been showing up in the southern portion of Saanich Inlet.

Further north in the same body of water, a good number of jacksprings and a smattering of coho are reported well offshore and fairly deep between Willis Point and McKenzie Bay, from McCurdy Point to Hatch Point as well as in Indian, Henderson and Cole bays.

Fair returns of springs up to 21 pounds and "very few coho" are reported off Oak Bay. Successful anglers have been trolling near Trial Island in the early morning and at The Gap during the evening, using 80 to 100 feet of line and eight ounces to a pound of weight.

Coho averaging five pounds are starting to show in Pedder Bay along with some springs up to 24 pounds along the kelp bed and out toward Bentinck Island.

Again they are running deep, and fishermen have been using 100 feet of line weighted down with between one and two pounds of lead.

Cowichan Bay fishermen are using up to five pounds of weight to get down among the springs which range up to 30 pounds. Bluebacks are also reported running deep through Sansum Narrows and in Maple Bay.

Further north on the Island, Jacks Point and Grey Rocks are yeilding the odd spring while tyee are starting to mover right into the Alberni Canal. These lunker salmon are said to be running up to 42 pounds near China Creek and Franklin River.

Coho up to 10 pounds have recently started snapping at lures off Bamfield.

Coho successes around Courtenay seemed to slump on Wednesday but action could quickly change for the better around Point Holmes, Pallister Rock and the south end of Hornby Island.

Tyee and coho action is hot and heavy around Campbell River with tyee ranging up to the 57:06-pounder which won Bob Leiwis the Courier Derby on Sunday. The coho between Shelter Point and Cape Mudge are now nudging 13 pounds.

★ ★ ★

For the trout angler, deep sunken red flies in Somenos Lake continued to produce limit catches during the week and brown trout on the upper Cowichan River are still succumbing to large white flies fished around 1 a.m.

The angler who trolls for trout should find fair to good success in Comox and Horne lakes.

Sea-run cutthroats were filling other anglers' creels near the mouth of the Oyster River on the incoming tide as well as in the Powerhouse Pool on the Puntledge. In the latter location many catches were taken on a yellow-bodied fly.

DAN SIKES
. . . best-ever putting

Sikes Moves Into Lead As Putts Fall Like Rain

SUTTON, Mass. (AP) — Raindrops kept falling and so did the putts, sending veteran Dan Sikes into a two-stroke lead in the opening round Thursday of the $160,000 Avco Golf Classic.

"It's probably the best putting round I've had in my life," the 39-year-old Sikes said.

"I've been playing golf for 20 years and this must be the best putting I've ever done," Sikes said after mastering mammoth greens for a six-under-par 66 at Pleasant Valley Country Club.

Carrying an umbrella, Sikes was an early starter in the bulky field of 153. He got off to a watery start, taking three putts for a one-over-par four on the first green.

ADJUSTED QUICKLY

However, the veteran from Forida quickly adjusted to the sprinkles. He registered four consecutive birdies starting with the second hole, and finished with a total of eight birds despite three three-putt greens on the 7,212-yard course.

Sikes, winless in two years on the PGA tour, came within one stroke of Pleasant Valley's competitive course record. He stamped himself as a top threat for the $32,000 first prize.

However, he had plenty of contenders waiting for him to falter in the second round today.

Salmonbellies Trip Adanacs

NEW WESTMINSTER — Already assured of the Western Lacrosse Association regular-season title, New Westminster Salmonbellies scored a hard-fought 19-16 victory over Coquitlam Adanacs Thursday before 1,400 fans at Queen's Park.

Smoky Has Jumped Ship Again

By PAT DUFOUR

A crew member of the Royal Victoria Yacht Club sloop Scorpion "jumped ship" while on an up-Island cruise this summer and is lost somewhere in the wilds of Comox.

She pulled off a successful pilot project last summer when the family sailed up to Princess Louisa Inlet on the mainland.

Becoming enamoured of the local hunting conditions, she was AWOL when her ship upped sails for home.

That was in July.

After last year's Labor Day weekend, 'Doc' got a call, telling him Smoky had been 'press-ganged' aboard the luxurious power cruiser of marine architect Bill Garden, who lives on Fernie Island.

She was delivered in fine, if slightly bloated condition — the hunting at Princess Louisa having proved a great deal more than adequate.

'Doc' is hoping Smoky's 1970 hunting season will be just as rewarding.

Genuine metal or porcelain bathtubs were specified although fiberglass and plastic versions were allowed if they were made from a regulation mold.

Twelve Thunderbirds were on the start line when the gun went for the second race in C series at Cadboro Bay Wednesday.

John Malleson's Sunday finished first, followed by Bob Grundison's Owl, Norm Marcus' Ahoo-Ya, Don Taylor's Sundance, Stan Cosburn's Wild Thing, Doug Harrison's Tambua, Walter Boyes' Baht'at, Gordie Nickells' Redskin, Steve Merriman's Geronimo, Rrchie Campbell's Ligero, Roger Davidson's Pahquee and Don Twine's Figaro.

There were two ties in series racing for X class dinghies.

Doug Lee and Walter Roots tied for top spot, while Doug Gray and Doug Kidd tied for third. Following them were Bill Van Cuylenborg, Alan McGillivray, John Higgins and Chris Mitten.

Other leaders were:

Last-Place Imps Pounce on Title

After finishing in the basement and winning a total of only eight games all year, Imperial Essos captured the Senior Amateur Baseball League playoff championship Thursday by edging Greaves Movers, 3-2, in a sudden-death final at Royal Athletic Park.

Entering the playoff with six wins in 24 games, Essos trounced Transport Workers 9-2 in a sudden-death semi-final and advanced to the deciding game with the Movers, who had upset league-cjampion Gorge Hotel 8-1 in the other semi-final.

Pitcher Bruce Rands held Greaves to seven hits in Thursday's triumph. Greaves' starter Gerry Lister allowed Essos three hits and one run in the first inning and yielded two more in the third on two hits and a sacrifice.

Southpaw George Hemming, who relieved Lister in the fourth, drove in both runs scored by the Movers in the bottom half of the same frame when he slashed a bases-loaded single.

Soccer Contests

London Boxing Club of the Victoria and District Soccer League second division will play two exhibition games this weekend against O'Keefes of the Mainland League first division.

Both contests will be played at Royal Athletic Park, the first at 8:30 p.m. Saturday and the second at 6 p.m. Sunday.

Bates Reach Final In Fourth Contest

Victoria Major Men's Softball League champion, Bate Construction, continued its winning way at Central Park Thursday by bouncing Lake Cowichan, 6-1, to win the best-of-five semi-fina play off series in four games.

Pitcher Barry Jackson struck out seven Cowichan batters and allowed only six hits, while Bates collected a total of 10 hits in the five-inning game which was halted because of darkness.

WEATHERLY OUT OF TRIALS

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — The New York Yacht Club pared the list of contenders to defend the America's Cup from four to three Thursday by eliminating Weatherly, the 1962 cup defender, from the final trials off Newport.

Word of the elimination was passed by the club's America's Cup committee to Weatherly's skipper, George Hinman, after Weatherly lost her third straight race in the final trials. She lost to Valiant by three minutes and 42 seconds Thursday.

In the day's other race, Intrepid was given a real tussle by Heritage but finally defeated the much-improved Florida boat by one minute, 12 seconds over the 24.3-mile America's Cup course.

Valiant now has a 3-0 record in the final trials. She became the official winner of Wednesday's race against Heritage when a protest filed against her by Heritage's skipper, Charley Morgan of St. Petersburg, Fla., was disallowed.

While the Americans were going ahead with their final trials, the French and Australians were getting ready to begin their best-of-seven elimination series to determine the challenger in this year's America's Cup match.

That series started today when the French yacht, France, went to the starting line with Australia's Gretel II, nine miles south-southwest of the Brenton Reef light tower off the Rhode Island coast. That starting line is about 10 miles away from the one the two American yachts will be using.

'Jesus Freaks' Pick Vancouver

VANCOUVER (CP) — A group of six advance "Soldiers" in Jesus Peoples Army have arrived in Vancouver and a division of about 150 more is expected to arrive from the U.S. in the next week.

"We are here to turn heads on to God. We will do it in the parks, on the beaches, and at impromptu rock festivals," said spokesman Jim Palosaari of Seattle.

The evangelical hippies — dubbed Jesus Freaks — have established about 350 communes in the U.S. Vancouver is the first Canadian city to be visited by the army.

"Within two weeks we will have a mass baptism of 400 converts on the beach. We plan to set up three or four communes in the city," Palosaari said.

The group will start its campaign Aug. 26 with a meeting and rock music at an auditorium.

The Jesus People draw their members from drug-users, alcoholics, Black Panthers and in some cases organized religions. They say that drugs expand the conscious mind, but they do not condone the use of drugs.

Rock Owne, 19, of Seattle, one of the six here, is an army convert who said he regards God as "the ultimate trip, the terminal high." He said he discovered God while serving a jail sentence for possession of drugs.

He said he prayed one day to get out of jail, and he was released the next day.

Boy Drowns

NEW DENVER — (CP) — Five year old Terrance Lorne Broughton drowned here Thursday when he fell from a wharf into Slocan Lake while fishing.

Car Recovered

CASTLEGAR (CP) — RCMP have recovered the car of Vincenzo Zanella, 20, of Kamloops, whose battered body was found two weeks ago near Chase. The car had been chopped into small pieces and dumped into a gully. Susan Carol Kopkins, 26, and Susan Gale Monkly, 19, both of Hamilton, Ont., and Kenneth James Hough, 19, of Toronto are charged with non-capital murder.

Tenders Called

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — The Royal Columbia Hospital has announced the calling of tenders for the long-awaited modular wing containing 174 beds in temporary wards. Bids for the project, the first step in a hospital renovation scheme, are due Oct. 1.

$100,000 EXPANSION PROPOSED

Forest Museum Seeks Local Support In Campaign for Centennial Funds

By DONNA CLEMENTS

DUNCAN — The Cowichan Valley Forest Museum is seeking support from Duncan and North Cowichan councils to make its proposed $100,000 expansion a provincial government centennial project.

"The only way the B.C. Centennial Committee will consider it as a special project is if the local people, through local governments, back us with either some or all of their centennial money," explained Pat Phillips, 28, manager of the forest museum for the past 18 months.

Councils have referred to their centennial committees the request for support for a forestry centre building and a new entrance.

The forestry centre building will be the key to establishing the museum as wholly representing the past, present and future of the foresty industry, said Phillips.

The building will not only serve as the new gateway to the museum, it will be comprised of a classroom or meeting room and the second part of the centre will be devoted to modern forestry.

"The classroom is of extreme importance because we feel the museum has exceptional education qualities," explained Phillips. "We want to develop a program where school childres can see forestry in action, unspoiled nature and our forestry heritage. It is becoming more and more important that school children get out on field trips and see our number one industry which is the basis for our province."

Phillips said more than 3,000 local and travelling classes of school children from all over the province visited the museum this year.

SIXTH YEAR

He said with the modern forestry section of the building they would be trying to show the public some of the significant aspects of modern forestry.

Phillips said the heritage of the forest industry is well established in the 40-acre museum now in its sixth year.

"The present and future will come with the 3,000 square foot building."

The entrance and parking facilities are 700 feet off the Trans-Canada Highway, two miles north of Duncan. Museum officials would like to establish the facilities right at the highway along with the proposed forestry centre building.

Phillips stressed that the forest museum is run by a non-profit society and is a community project.

"This is our best year by far," said Phillips. "Visitors are up 25 per cent over last year. Over 40,000 people went through the gates last year.

1928 Truck To Cross Canada

A 1928 truck will cross Canada next year to draw attention to the centennial of British Columbia's entry into Confederation.

Called the "Confederation '71 Express," the truck will offer a souvenir to philatelists in the form of a "first day cover" on its Jan. 12 to Feb. 20 tour beginning in St. John's Nfld. and ending in Victoria.

The vehicle will carry messages of greeting to premiers and the prime minister in Ottawa on its stops.

B.C. Has Jump On Region Gov't

NORTH COWICHAN — British Columbia has already moved into regional government where other provinces are still wondering about it, Ald. Don Morton said today.

Morton was B.C.'s local government representative at the recent meeting of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities at Winnipeg.

"The regional form of government was thought by several provinces to be necessary before constructive talks could take place at higher levels," he said.

It was stressed repeatedly that the municipal delegation, led by Mayor Ivor Dent of Edmonton, CFMM president, represented all local government, urban and rural, he said.

MAIN PURPOSE

"Though the immediate pressing problems might be urban, these also affect the rural resident, which might make the next set of problems rural ones."

The main purpose was to establish machinery for three-level talks for tackling matters of general concern.

"If this is done as a result of the Winnipeg meetings, then they are certainly historic," Morton said.

He said the meetings achieved more than some delegates had expected.

TRUSTEE PRESIDENT 'OUT OF STEP'

Burnaby (CP) — Jack Fleming, chairman of Burnaby school board, said Thursday that trustees' association president Jim Campbell is "out of step in modern management concepts."

Fleming was replying to criticism from Campbell Wednesday of the contract signed July 24 between Burnaby teachers and the school board. Campbell, of Saturna Island, said he considered the contract illegal because it delegated too much authority to teachers, giving them what are essentially the powers of trustees.

Fleming said he had sent the contract to Victoria to be checked, and that he felt it to be "entirely within the scope of our authority."

New Ship Arrives Up-Island

CAMPBELL RIVER — Another addition to the growing fleet of ships transporting pulp, paper and lumber from Elk Falls Co. Ltd. to world ports called at Duncan Bay recently.

On her maiden voyage, the Mv Rubystone was built in Hamburg for the Ital-Pacific Shipping Line. She has a top speed of 25 knots, a cruising speed of 22.5 knots and a dead weight capacity of 12,000 tons.

She is the first of four similar ships planned by the line. Her sister ships will be named Pearlstone, Coralstone and Lodestone.

Cargo on the Rubystone's first return voyage, which will take in several Mediterranean ports, will include 2,700 tons of baled kraft pulp.

One-Woman Airline Enjoys Job

COMMERCIAL FLYERS Carole and Barry Morris sit in their Cherokee Six aircraft which is part of Trans-Inland Airlines, a small interior charter service operating out of Revelstoke. While husband Barry is operating flying school at Yellowknife, N.W.T., Carole manages daily affairs of Trans-Inland.

By ELIZABETH FORBES

Forbes

Been up to Revelstoke lately. Perhaps flown in a Cherokee Six to Nelson, Mica Creek, Prince George or out to Kamloops to connect with the mainline flight? If so, then you've met Victoria-born Carole Morris, the most versatile young woman in the mountain railway town.

While her husband Barry Morris is at Yellowknife, N.W.T., organizing a flying school, she is running her own one-woman airline at Revelstoke.

She manages the Trans-Inland-Airlines office there, sells and takes tickets for the regular scheduled airline-type airobus service that she and her husband operate, and when no other pilot is available for duty she takes over that role too.

When her day, which begins before 6 a.m., is over, she goes back to her home near the airport, to three little girls, Nicole, five, Tammy, three, and one-year-old Michelle, and to her mother, Mrs. C. Phillips (Grandma "B" to the youngsters), who takes care of the little ones "while mummy is flying."

* * *

Still in her twenties, Carole Morris has been flying light aircraft of all types since she was 16, when she qualified for a private pilot's licence at the Victoria Flying Club.

She gained her commercial pilot licence when she was 19, then became a flying instructor and secretary at Cassidair, where she met Barry.

Together they have logged many flying hours, crossed Canada several times and made trips to the Bahamas and to Mexico in a small plane.

They started their own line as Morris Aviation in May, 1966, with two older aircraft. First charter flights were to Mica Creek.

Today, they are founders and co-owners of Trans-Inland Airlines and one of the few husband-wife flying teams in commercial aviation in Canada.

With the granting of a class three licence by Air Transport Committee in Ottawa a year ago, their operation became the third largest certified airline in British Columbia.

* * *

Based at Revelstoke and called the alpine route because of the mountains up there, Trans-Inland provides air connections on a regular scheduled basis to and from the major airlines terminals.

In addition, Carole and Barry operate a flying school, charter service and scenic tours.

January this year saw Carole with two of her small daughters, ferrying a plane back to California for an American pilot who left it in Revelstoke the summer before. Barry met his family in Sacramento and flew them to Phoenix, Arizona, where he was competing in stock plane races.

In one event he was lined up to take off when his seat jumped the track. Quickly, he climbed over into the right-hand seat and blasted off, ten seconds late. He captured fourth place in the event.

It was described as a sensational piece of flying and a feat that marked a "first" in the annal of air racing.

At an Ogopogo Fly-In at Vernon a couple of years ago, the couple proved they could clown as well as fly by staging a comic skit that saw Carole disguised as a white-haired old woman who had never flown before.

As Barry was pleading with her to get into the cockpit of a single-engine Cessna, he was called away to the telphone. Of course, the thing took off and flew a series of manoeuvres around the field then was brought to a bumpy but safe landing by the supposed little old grandmother.

* * *

At present, Carole has no time for clowning. She's too busy putting on and taking off her various hats as pilot, airlines manager and mother.

She did get down to the recent Abbotsford Air Show but only because she was flying charter trips there.

Black War Victim Barred From Burial

FORT PIERCE, Fla. (AP) — A cemetery that advertises free burial plots for former U.S. servicemen won't take a young soldier killed in Vietnam. Specialist Pondexteur E. Williams is unwanted because he's black.

Williams, 20, was killed by a mortar barrage Aug. 8 in Vietnam. His body arrived home Wednesday, and an undertaker asked officials of Hillcrest Memorial Gardens about a free plot.

James Livesay, cemetery manager, went to the home of Williams's mother, Mary Campbell, and said he would face lawsuits from white buyers if he violated the "whites only" clause of the 5,755 contracts the cemetery has entered into since it began in 1954.

Mrs. Campbell, a 36-year-old pastry cook who earns $74.83 weekly, said: "I'm the kind of person who wouldn't want to cause nobody any trouble. I'm going to bury my boy in the black cemetery Sunday."

Livesay offered to pay the $155 for a plot at Pine Grove, customary burial place for blacks in Fort Pierce. Mrs. Campbell said she was undecided about accepting the offer.

Committee Formed

VANCOUVER (CP) — A committee to recruit adoptive homes for children needing care away from their own homes has been formed by a group of "concerned citizens." The committee, which is supported by the Children's Aid Society and the Catholic Family and Children's Service, will start with a display booth at the Pacific National Exhibition.

Manson Speaks Of Mistreatment

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sullen and scowling, Charles Manson told the judge in the Sharon Tate murder trial that he was being mistreated in county jail, and "it's like kicking a dead man."

"I have not heard or seen any evidence thus far of interference with the preparation of your case," Judge Charles Older of the Superior Court said after listening to Manson for 45 minutes Thursday.

He postponed the rest of the hearing on Manson's motion until today so the trial could go on.

The shaggy-haired, bearded Manson took the witness stand, with the jury absent, before the regular court session. He said he was receiving "barbaric" treatment and was forced to go through "a lot of confusing procedure" in jail.

But he added: "It makes me stronger. I can't be discouraged. I don't know what discouragement means."

MAKE HIM DISROBE

Manson said that several times daily he had been subjected to "shakedowns" in which deputies made him disrobe and then probed his body.

He said he wasn't allowed to have pencils and paper and that mail from his friends was stopped while "hate mail" was allowed to get through. He said a "dark screen" interferes with vision and voices when he interviews prospective witnesses.

"The mental aspect is much more cruel than the physical," he said. "If someone comes in and beats you up it's all over . . . But I have to go through your sex paranoia and your insecurity over and over."

Under cross-examination by a county counsel, Manson said the skin searches had dwindled lately; he had plenty of pencils in court and had interviewed three witnesses in the lawyers' room of the jail.

CALL WITNESSES

In trial testimony, the prosecution called a series of witnesses who described the bloody scene at the Tate mansion the morning of Aug. 9, 1969, when the blonde actress and four others were found slain.

The defence said outside the courtroom it had offered to accept details of the death without witnesses, but that the prosecution refused.

Three officers—Jerry DeRosa, William Whisenhunt, and Roberts Burbridge—testified that they were among the first at the estate.

Burbridge and DeRosa both noted that brightly lit "Christmas tree lights" glowed on a split rail fence around the mansion and floodlights were on. Key state witness Linda Kasabian has said the estate was dark on the murder night, except for a small garage light.

GIRL FRIDAYS

Some Fast Dames —A Case History

By Jack Scott

Today's contribution, in the nature of a tribute to the women who really run our affairs, began at a luncheon table in Victoria's Union Club.

By a series of coincidences too bizarre for you to believe, I found myself there with no less than six of our town's leading executives, each of them with his hair down (those, that is, with hair), confessing that chaos would result if the Girl Fridays of today were to desert their posts.

"The one indispensable factor in business today," said one, "is the private secretary."

The unanimous murmur of approval would have brought the roses to the cheeks of every little lady who works in the outer office.

Scott

The net effect was to send me poste haste to the reference shelves and the Chamber of Commerce archives, a research project that took me all the way back to Rose Fritz. That was in the year 1905 when typing speed alone was the way to the bosses' flinty hearts. The girl who could go like the wind on her Pittsburgh Visible or Smith Silent Eight was the girl of the hour.

Rose was one of a bevy of virtuoso typists who rocketed up to and far beyond the magic, break-through mark of 130 words a minute, the four-minute mile of the flying typing machines.

The papers of the time were filled with the news of Rose's practice methods which favored the use of ponderous texts of higher mathematics and astronomy. She could rattle off a cool 100 polysyllabic words a minute purely in the interest, as a yellowed Victoria Times clipping tells me, "of keeping her fingers in the highest state of suppleness."

By the early 20s Stella Willins had replaced Rose as queen of the typists when she was clocked at no less than 264 words per minute. When she arrived in her cloche hat at one contest, elegant and poised in a motorcycle side-car, the police had to hold back the adoring crowds.

(Joyce Holden, who teaches English and shorthand at Sprott-Shaw here, tells me that Stella's 264 words per minute would be impossible under today's competitive conditions which call for a full hour of typing and a penalty of 10 words for every incorrect word. Under those rules the world record on a manual machine was set in 1923 by one Albert Tangora who managed 147 words a minute and, on an electric machine, in 1941, by Margaret Hamma who clipped along at 149 words a minute. Miss Hamma managed 210 words a minute in one "two-minute burst.")

Another early-day world champion was Margaret Owen whose patented methods became the Bible of every office girl. "Don't be a key clasher," Margaret advised, and, "The left thumb is an outcast, but the right thumb is monarch of the space bar." Stirring words, you'll agree.

The Owen practice lines, long since forgotten, were known to every stenographer (or "typewritist") of the day. For the second row of keys, for example, it was "Had Alaska a flag a lad asks Jak" and, for the third, "Try to write true or quit your poor typewriter" and, for a fast warm-up, "A quick movement of the enemy would jeopardize six gunboats."

Even then, it seems, the typewriter was seen as a great emancipator, a sentiment admirably expressed by one J. N. Kimball.

"The typewriter has blessed young womanhood as nothing in the line of invention ever blessed her before," he opined. "It cut the strings that bound her to unhealthy and ill-paying pursuits and placed within her grasp a profession eminently fitted to her peculiar make-up."

In subsequent, more sophisticated times the typewriter was almost forgotten in the formidable list of the ideal secretary's requirements.

They were noted by Sheila A. Ward, of Montreal, in her work called "A Secretary's Secrets," as discretion, loyalty, unerring tact, team spirit, good posture, immaculate grooming, pleasant voice, clear diction, an eye for detail, a "phenomenal" memory for dates and a "good" memory for names and faces.

She should compose clear, concise letters that sounded as if her boss wrote them, "lie honestly and decently," take criticism gracefully, be friendly and cheerful, impersonal and unprejudiced, extend courtesy to everyone, "coat bitter pills with feminine charm," be kind to the office boy and leave office parties early.

She was to be, as well, an expert mind reader and a good listener, get at least seven hours sleep a night and take adequate exercise ("once an hour when nobody is around, touch your toes 10 times.")

The ideal secretary, Miss Ward went on, would never watch the clock, gossip, look harassed, indulge in nervous tics (lip-biting, girdle-hitching, etc.) and never, never wear fire-engine red or passionate purple.

Obviously no man could answer these qualifications. The statistics tell the inevitable story. In 1891 there were 383 female and 468 male stenographers and typists in Canadian offices. Fifty years later the ratio was something like 78,000 females to fewer than 3500 males and by 1949 the Canadian Civil Service Stenographers' Manual had all but assumed that the male was gone forever.

It started right off by warning against "costume jewelry, gum-chewing and crooning."

Jobless Plan Protest March

Unemployed citizens groups in Victoria and Vancouver have called rallies for Aug. 26 to protest high unemployment and demand decent jobs or a guaranteed annual income.

Members of the Victoria Citizens' Committee on Unemployment and the Low Income Group will march from Bastion Square at 12:30 p.m. to the offices of the Provincial Alliance of Businessmen at 620 View and Canada Manpower, 1415 Vancouver.

The delegation will present briefs to officials of both agencies.

In Vancouver, the rally has been called by the Unemployed Citizens Welfare Improvement Council and the Action Committee for Unemployed Youth.

Hydro Yields and Brings Polecat Down

It was all a little bewildering this morning for five-months-old Misty, a very frightened white kitten, and two-year-old David Bouchard, her master.

Onlookers cheered as B.C. Hydro lineman Dunc Bissett handed Misty to David's babysitter Debbie Vanyo who passed the kitten over to the boy.

B.C. Hydro earlier refused to rescue her because of the dangerous high voltage wires attached to the pole.

Calls poured into local hotline shows protesting the decision.

Finally, Thursday night, Mayor Courtney Haddock put a call through to Hydro from his yacht along the east coast of Vancouver Island and the company agreed to kill the circuit and send a man up the pole.

•

Residents in an area north to Cedar Hill, south to Finlayson, east to Holloway and west to Falmouth were without electricity for 20 minutes during the rescue operation at 10 a.m.

David Beeching from the SPCA doesn't know what all the fuss was about.

"What people don't seem to realize is that cats can go a number of days without food and water. I've been down there every day since that cat's been up there and it was perfectly comfortable until today."

Beeching said he was "positive" that if left alone, Misty would have come down on her own.

The SPCA has come under sharp criticism.

"I phoned the B.C. Hydro about the cat earlier in the week but they flatly refused to rescue it," said Beeching.

'The Saanich electrical street lighting department took a look at the situation and said it was too dangerous to try and get at that cat with all those high voltage wires."

Mrs. Henry Eng, wife of the owner of a nearby grocery store said the $25 collected from employees to pay for Misty's rescue was refused by B.C. Hydro.

Topless Pair Fined After Stag Party

A man and two women were charged in provincial court this morning following a police raid on a stag party at a downtown club late Wednesday night.

Katheryn Marlene Barnes, 20, of a downtown hotel, and Sandra Carol Evans, 20, of 645 Dunedin, both pleaded guilty to separate charges of being inmates of a common bawdy house Aug. 20.

A man identified in court only as William Daniel Walker was remanded without plea on charges of keeping a common bawdy house and publishing obscene moving pictures.

The two women were each fined $50 by Judge William Ostler, and each was given a week to pay.

A 10-man police squad raided the Downunder Club at 1206 Wharf Street after plain-clothes officers had watched two topless dancers perform before an audience of 85 men.

The judge asked Miss Barnes how long she had been engaged in such "bizarre" conduct.

She asked Ostler exactly what he meant by bizarre conduct.

"It seems evident from the facts," he replied.

She told court she had been "a go-go dancer for about a month now."

Court was also told by a uniformed police officer that he had entered the premises in civilian clothes and that about 9:35 p.m. a man entered with movies and a screen.

The films showed "in my opinion, every type of sexual deviation" including a sexual act between two lesbians, the officer said.

Prosecutor John Macintyre, however, asked that the evidence relating to the movies be withdrawn at the time because it did not relate to the charges brought against the two women.

HANSEN RULED FIT FOR TRIAL

Inner Harbor of Parks Backed by Museum Head

The director of the Provincial Museum backed a city alderman Thursday in his struggle to save the Inner Harbor foreshore for parks and people.

Bristol Foster said he supports Ald. Peter Pollen who earlier this week criticized proposed high-rise development on the harbor's rim and said the first 100 feet from the waterfront should be reserved for parks with boulevards for people to enjoy.

Foster said it's obvious something has to happen to the Inner Harbor.

'PRETTY REPULSIVE'

The combination of water and land posed by the Inner Harbor is an intricate one to deal with, said Foster, a biologist who describes himself as an ecologist. Combined with the Gorge, there could be a long thin park development stretching across the heart of the city.

All the great cities of the world are marked by rich park development of this sort, the museum director said. He cited as examples the Bois de Boulogne of Paris and Cologne's extensive parks established by former mayor Conrad Adenauer decades ago as examples.

Every time another high-rise goes up, Victoria falls further behind in its ratio of parkland to people.

"It's all part of the negative or primitive outlook on the part of some members of city council," Foster said. "They've heard the word ecology but they really don't know what it means."

Rescue Centre To Move Here

Headquarters of the Canadian Forces Rescue Co-ordination Centre, which has organized thousands of sea rescues and mercy flights since it was founded in 1947, will be moved from Vancouver to HMC Dockyard, Esquimalt, on Sept. 1.

Responsible for search and rescue operations in the Pacific area, the centre is leaving Vancouver for Victoria as part of the consolidation program for Canadian Forces' bases which began in 1966.

Callers with information on air and marine troubles will still follow the same procedure of dialling O for the operator and asking for the centre.

Residents of the Greater Vancouver area will be able to contact the centre direct by dialling 732-4141.

A service spokesman said the move will provide an opportunity to update equipment, resulting in a more effective and reliable communications network during search and rescue operations.

Rescue aircraft will continue to be based at Comox.

Arthur Mayse . . .

ON MY WAY TO WORK this morning, I passed a patch of wasteland dominated by a long, mounded tangle of blackberry vines. Years ago, some gardener from a neighboring house must have dumped a basket of prunings there.

The result, in these mellow days of late summer, is free fruit for anybody who will spare the time and trouble to harvest it.

Since the green hillock with its nooks and bays covers a sizeable area, a number of pickers may have been busy there. But I saw only one — a middle-aged woman who plainly knew what she was about.

A fruit juice can hung from a string around her neck, leaving her hands free for a task well-suited to a sunny morning. She didn't attack the vines as novice pickers do, and I'm comfortably sure no berry that showed even a fleck of red went into the can.

These are tame blackberries allowed to ramble wild. If you're a newcomer to this land of milk and honey and other good things, be assured that you'll find such berry bonanzas plentifully distributed. By determined prospecting, you may even find a tucked-away patch that few pickers know about.

Once in the years before a blackberry vine reached up to lace itself among overgrown laurels on our place, we found just such a trove. Without moving more than a dozen feet along its perimeter, we filled every container we'd brought along. Then we loaded my fishing hat.

But the blackberry we like best and sometimes find is the small, wonderfully-flavored wild one. It is at its finest where the loggers have felled, yarded, burned and passed on. Look for it where fireweed grows. It is a ground-hugger, its skinny, prickly vines sprawling among the stumps, with a leaf or two already reddening for autumm.

Alongside an old logging grade we often travelled, we once found a splendid wild blackberry swarm. Next time we followed that grade, we took two small cans of evaporated milk and a couple of large enamelled mugs with us.

We picked until the mugs were half full. Then we punctured the cans with my knife, and poured the milk on the berries. No sugar was needed. Nature aided by plentiful sunshine had provided her own sweetening.

That feast set a pattern: wild blackberries, I still believe, are best enjoyed on a hot day after miles walked, and with miles still to cover.

This coast yields other berries to those who seek them out.

Some, like the salmonberry, are for the birds, and scarce worth the bother of gathering. But well-ripened Oregon grapes make a good, slightly tart pioneer's jelly, and no man has lived until he has sat down to a huckleberry pie stained by its overflow of rich juice.

There are also blue huckleberries, although the name we knew them by may not be their correct one. They grew in thickets at the 4,000-foot level on a mountain we used to frequent. We gathered them, not as individual berriess, but by the handful.

Mostly, that is. But one morning when we were filling a lard pail, we became aware from cracklings and occasional mild grumblings from down-slope that another harvester was at work.

We filled a lard pail, set it on a stump, then went off to split cedar shakes for a cabin roof. As we later learned, we should have taken that pail with us.

When we returned for it, our berries were scattered and the pail mashed flat. An unmannerly piece of bear-business, and in a place where there was plenty for all, entirely uncalled for.

At Little Lorraine in Cape Breton years later, I told a crew of swordfishermen about that bear and those berries. Someone suggested we fill time by picking bake-apples to go with our supper.

But those bake-apples disappointed me. Somehow, they lacked the flavor of blue huckleberries or wild blackberries ripened under a West Coast sun.

Tailors Display Talents

By Florence de Santis

Our good friends at the British Wool Textile Industry offices advise us that London girls reverted to many minis for summer, but fall styles are coming through in longer lengths.

The British have been accustomed to mid lengths for several seasons now, seem to have settled down to the idea of changing hem lengths with the season or according to whim. Designers are showing great enthusiasm for longer styles, as they can again display that British talent for tailoring.

Jackets often have fit-and-flare silhouettes, collars are notched, welt seaming accents edges. To keep longer skirts from looking limp or dreary, the are divided into panels by slot seaming, welt-seamed at the hemline.

Colors in British fall fashions are varied, but violet has emerged as the high fashion leader, followed by peat brown and red. Scottish tweeds pick up these colors, as well as cinnamon, terracotta and deep yellow.

Abstract prints on pure new wool are significant, while in textured fabrics jacquard weaves form the chief news. Worsteds, twills and velours are more important this fall than textures.

British designers are handling longer length by either cropping bodices or giving distinctive shaping to jackets of suits and cosutmes. The shaping trend isn't confined to women's styles, either, but appears in new British men's styles.

Custom tailors are featuring what used to be called "waist suppression," a semi-fitted silhouette, accented by wider shoulders and lapels. This more formal men's look is being done in single-breasted jackets of plaid or check wools which were once confined to sportswear. Some tailors are trying braid-bound edges to accent these new, shaped men's suits.

British Girls Bared Midriffs From Beaches to Office Desks

By JOAN DEPPA

LONDON (UPI) — The bare, bare midriff has been Britain's biggest fad this summer and the girl with a thick middle is out of luck.

Exposure of the midsection started on the beach, spread to evening wear and one fine, sunny day began invading city streets and offices.

It even turned up on debutantes and socialites at the ultrafashionable Royal Ascot horse races. Stewards barred that particular display of anatomy from the enclosure where Queen Elizabeth II mixes with Britain's upper-crust.

The look caught on fast. Girls discovered last year's shirts and blouses could be tied up or tucked under their bras to bare as much as they dared.

The most popular method: Leave a tailored shirt unbottoned below bosom and tie the two ends together — just as Rita Hayworth and other World War II pinups demonstrated years ago.

Many girls left all the buttons unfastened, leaving longer pieces to fasten together and a deep, wide swath of cleavage exposed. This method required the wearer to go without a bra and was especially eye-popping when it used last year's see-through blouses.

Trousers usually were hip-huggers, exposing navel as well as the waist and ribcage, but skirts generally started at the waist.

Dresses often had cutouts at midriff level and one range of midi dresses featured halter necklines that bared the back and plunged in front to bosom level where the two sides were held together loosely before the neckline continued its dizzy descent to the navel.

you're sew right

By DALE CAVANAGH

Eliminating Darts

Here's a little item that you who sew may find extremely enlightening.

In a recent collection by designer Jo Copeland, the beautifully fluid dresses that were shown, seemed to be shaped by some subtle magic. Noticeably absent were the usual darts that one acquainted with sewing expects to see.

The magic shaping of these dartless dresses was a fitting tribute to the art of easing and the presser's skill.

If you are familiar with commercial tissue patterns you are well aware of the inevitable darts used to shape the bust and the back shoulder.

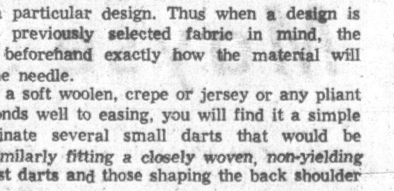
When tissue patterns are made, these darts are inserted of necessity to insure proper fitting for a variety of fabrics. Those who make the patterns cannot know, although they suggest, what type of fabric the purchaser will select for a specific design.

When a famous designer like Jo Copeland creates, chances are the fabric is selected first and is often the inspiration for a particular design. Thus when a design is created with a previously selected fabric in mind, the designer knows beforehand exactly how the material will behave under the needle.

If you select a soft woolen, crepe or jersey or any pliant fabric that responds well to easing, you will find it a simple matter to eliminate several small darts that would be necessary for similarly fitting a closely woven, non-yielding fabric. Small bust darts and those shaping the back shoulder are examples.

In the fabrics that respond well to easing, instead of stitching the dart, simply run a gathering thread (6 to 8 stitches per inch) and about 3" each way from centre of dart markings, along the seamline.

Baste the two sections together and adjust the excess fullness allowed by the dart to fit the other section by drawing up the gathering thread. Distribute ease evenly and shrink out with a steam iron, pressing curves over a tailor's ham or pressing mitt.



INSTEAD OF STITCHING DART — MACHINE GATHER — EASE IN FULNESS

Be careful with crepe. This should be pressed with a dry pressing cloth under the steam iron, or its characteristic texture can be lost.

You might try this idea on a practice scrap first, to see how it works in your fabric.

Do not try to eliminate large, long curved or cut-out darts in this manner. It is only suitable for short or narrow darts and only with pliant fabrics.

DEAR ABBY . . .

Desert Dullards

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Why do men and women at so many parties insist on segregating themselves?

My husband and I recently left such a party rather early because of sheer boredom. The women sat on one side of the room and talked about their children, clothes and other women. While the men sat on the other side rehashing every baseball, basketball and football game played during the last five years. They also complained about their jobs. These couples are college graduates in their mid thirties.

The men seem to resent any attempt to change the subject of their conversation, and the women couldn't care less about anything other than their homes and families.

The purpose of a party is to meet new people, discuss different ideas and viewpoints and to get away from the household routine and daily grind of the office.

There must be something a guest can do to break up the hen sessions and the locker room boys.—Bored in Atlanta.

DEAR BORED: Not in that crowd. You and your husband should find other friends. There are plenty of young people in Atlanta who can offer more stimulating conversation than you describe. If you aren't involved in civic and political things you ought to be. That is where the action is. Dullards deserve each other.

DEAR ABBY: Last night my husband and I were dining out and we received the shock of our lives. The husband of one of my best friends was also dining out with another woman! I am sure it wasn't innocent. You can tell the way people act around each other.

Should I tell my friend about her husband's rendezvous? Or should I keep my mouth shut? I am hesitant because there are children involved, and I wouldn't want to be responsible for breaking up a home.—Undecided.

DEAR UNDECIDED: In that case, the answer is obvious. Keep your mouth shut.

DEAR ABBY: I am 57 years old and a grandmother, and I've always acted my age and dressed my age. My daughter, who is 23 is after me to wear shorts, especailly to picnics and outings where there are folks of all ages present. Abby, I am quite slim and I don't suppose I would look to bad in shorts, but I just don't think it's becoming for a woman my age to wear them. I feel much more comfortable in a dress or slacks.

Do you think I'm an old stick-in-the-mud, Abby? I want to please my daughter but I must please myself, too. What to you think?—Granny Goose.

DEAR GRANNY: If you feel uncomfortable in shorts, don't wear them. I'm sure your daughter means well, but don't let her talk you into anything. Especially shorts.

DEAR ABBY: Will you please print, for all to read, your thoughts regarding whether or not a widow must (should) be asked over for dinner two times for every single time that she entertains the couple at her home.

Many widows feel that they are entitled to two dinners for every dinner they give for couples.

We are a couple who always invite our widowed friends — but not two for one.—One for One: Not Two for One.

DEAR ONE: This "two for one" idea is news to me. So many widows are overlooked entirly, I can't imagine any (much less "many") widows expecting it.

Letter writing can be a breeze. For Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions," send $1 to Abby, Box 69700, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069.

Women's Strike? Not in Victoria

By GINNY GALT

What does Aug. 26 mean to you?

To feminists across the United States it means Liberation Day. It's the 50th anniversary of women's suffrage.

A coalition of Washington, D. C. women is asking all members of their sex to go on a day-long strike for equal rights.

Canadian women's liberation groups are urging Canadian women to do the same.

A street survey in Victoria indicated that women here will not be going on strike, and men are lukewarm about the whole idea.

Organizer Darby Costello, secretary of the Washington chapter of the National Organization for Women, is calling on housewives, secretaries, poor women, professionals, and students to cease doing on Aug. 26 whatever is oppressive in their lives.

Housewives will refuse to cook, sew, or wash dishes; secretaries will wear slacks instead of skirts; and others will strike or stage a work slowdown.

Some women will refuse to wear bras, walk through doors held open for them by men or accept seats offered on buses and subways.

Mothers will dump their babies at their husbands' offices, forcing them to babysit. Other mothers will deposit their children on the steps of city halls to show the need for child care centres.

Women will dump their symbols of oppression — sex manuals, aprons, bras, or whatever — in freedom trash cans.

Demonstration burning is out — it pollutes.

They are also expected to withhold their favors and reject their husbands' advances as part of a drive to bring about sexual equality.

Miss Costello is advocating a total consumer boycott as strong objection to the consumer role "that essentially exploits women."

She said the whole demonstration is against continuing discrimination and subjugation of women to inferior supportive roles.

The women's three main demands are for free abortion on request, free 24-hour child-care centres controlled by the community, and equal job and education opportunities.

A spokesman for the New Feminists in Toronto said, while Canadian women are supporting all these activities, they will not go as far as the American women and desist from lovemaking and housekeeping on that day.

ANNE APPLEBY, a recent arrival from England, where she worked with a family planning association: "Well, I think for housewives it's a great idea. But I think the women's liberation movement is going the wrong way with its abortion demands when free birth control advice would be a better arrangement."

GWEN GILMOUR, housewife: "I'm not really much for this women's liberation in the first place. I believe women should be out in the world, but if you're a housewife, you should definitely be at home looking after the children until they're of age to look after themselves."

MRS. ED SHAK, housewife: "I think it's a farce, I think they're a bunch of fools. My God, are we going to lose our femininity because of it? That's what they're advocating, isn't it? My gosh, we're only women."

J. T. LINDSAY, armed forces: "I see no objection to it. I don't disagree with liberalizing abortion laws, but a proposal for straight blanket abortion on demand would require a great deal of thought. If my wife refused to cook, well, I cook enough for myself anyway. And if she dropped the children of at work, and I walked away from them, she'd soon return to see that no harm came to them."

JUDY GALLARD, government work: "I wouldn't mind stopping work, but I don't really agree with the whole idea of the strike. I like things the way they are, myself."

ANTHONY KEBLE, U.B.C. graduate student: "It's a good idea for any woman who considers it necessary to go on strike. But presumably, she shouldn't be doing things in the first place if she doesn't like them."

MISS EDITH GWILT: "I'm fed up with strikes, although I guess I'm impartial. I go with the crowd, but I don't think the crowd is going with women's liberation."

DIANNE WINSBY, housewife: "Well, I like cooking meals for my husband and taking the kids out. I don't like working for a living. I think the people protesting are the ones who are bored at home. I haven't reached that stage yet, I just quit working six months ago."

MAHINDAR SANGHA, owner of a trucking business: "I think they've got enough rights, they don't have to go on strike. There are enough of them on strike already. What if us men went on strike and said we're not going to look after you girls?"

CFUW Becomes Bilingual

TORONTO (CP) — French-speaking delegates at a meeting of the Canadian Federation of University Women said they are pleased to see a steady increase in the use of the French language at the organization's meetings.

Isabelle Florine of Hull, Que., said in an interview she had attended a five-day meeting of the 11,000-member federation 10 years ago "and we didn't hear much French."

She said that "there were four of us at the meeting and for the first time we were asked to speak French."

"Then the federation magazine, The Chronicle, published an article in French and now we have all the resolutions and agendas available in French. It's a big step."

David Courchene, president of the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood, said white men should support Indians but let them find their own solutions to some of their problems.

Indians do not have immediate answers to many of their problems and society must understand their difficulty in adjusting to contemporary ways, Mr. Courchene told the conference.

He said white men "have taken a people who enjoyed life, accepted responsibility for their fellow men and knew contentment and happiness" and converted them to a people "who accept with indifference their status on the bottom rung of the social ladder."

In another discussion, Dr. Ralph Brinkhurst, professor of zoology at the University of Toronto, said world polluters should be made to pay the cost of their pollution.

Never Mix

Never wash colored napped fabrics such as terrycloth towels or bath mats in the same wash with any garments that will shed lint. Lint, trapped in the nap of the colored fibre, is extremely difficult to remove and will be visible.

Raids Snare Few Soldiers

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Pentagon official reports that 58 narcotics raids during the first half of the year netted only 29 U.S. servicemen in Vietnamese bars, houses of prostitution and private homes where dangerous drugs were available.

That testimony Thursday by Frank Bartimo, the Pentagon's assistant general counsel for manpower and reserve affairs, prompted Senator Thomas J. Dodd (Dem. Conn.) to ask about other witnesses' reports that operators of such places were tipped in advance so Americans could flee.

Bartimo told Dodd's subcommittee he had "heard the same thing but I cannot indulge in rumors or guesses."

"You scare me," Dodd said. "I don't think you yet believe it is a serious problem."

Bartimo insisted there has been an exaggeration of the size of the problem of illegal drug use by servicemen. Reliable surveys do not substantiate "the estimated 50-per-cent, 75-per-cent or 80-per-cent use sometimes quoted in the media," he added, but put it at a "ballpark figure of 30 per cent" mostly involving marijuana.

MAN TEACHES CAR A LESSON

UTRECHT, Holland — A policeman stopped a car for speeding and was surprised when one of the two men inside took an iron bar from the back and began battering the vehicle.

"As this happens to be my car, I can do with it as I please," police quoted the man as saying.

The policeman was not too surprised to give the driver a ticket and the men walked away.

Real Live Disney Characters Keep Empress Ladies on Toes

Yes kiddies, that really is Mickey Mouse you see wandering around town.

He and his king-size companions, Pluto and Goofy, are here with Snow White to promote Disney on Parade, Sept. 1 to 6, probably one of the most extravagant spectaculars ever to hit the Memorial Arena.

The four Disney characters will be appearing on television and are entertaining children at St. Joseph's Hospital, Queen Alexander Solarium and some of Victoria's bigger department stores.

CAN'T SPEAK

All the characters except Snow White are under strict orders not to speak, said advance representative P. K. Von Egidy.

"Mel Blanc did the voices for Mickey, Pluto and Goofy. If the little kids heard the characters speak in different voices their hearts would be broken."

The cast of 105 have staged their show, Disney on Parade, in 15 cities in the U.S. and Canada. The show opened in Chicago on Christmas Day and finishes its run in Boston on Oct. 18.

Disney on Parade is not a touring version of Disneyland but a joint venture of NBC and Walt Disney Productions.

Highlights of the show will include a mad musical unbirthday party with Alice and the rest of the Wonderland gang; a psychedelic safari with the Jungle Book characters and a Cinderella Ball featuring 40 costumed dancers.

Disney on Parade will be back on the road in November and at the same time a whole new Disney show will begin its tour, said Von Egidy.

"The production staff has done a wonderful job," said Snow White (who really does look like Snow White, even close up).

"The difficulty was making two dimensional story-book characters into living three-dimensional characters. We think they've succeeded."

Forecast Revised

WASHINGTON (AP) — The census bureau has made a sharp downward revision from its estimate of three years ago of what the U.S. population would be by the year 2000. In 1967, census experts projected the total at between 283 million and 361 million. But now, they say, it looks as though the population will fall in a range of 266 million to 320 million by century's end. The bureau said the new estimate is based on a decline in the birth rate.

Margaret Loses Her Head In 40th Birthday Portrait

"I can't remember a princess being beheaded in a royal birthday portrait before," said Tim Lees, an exper for Christie's art auctioneers.

"It looks as if Princess Margaret's head has become detached from her body and suspended, with mascara running rivulets down her cheeks, in an unlit prison cell on a particularly dark night," says the Daily Sketch.

Organ, 35, who was commissioned by a lawyers society and recommended by Margaret, said:

"My thought was that royal portraits have stood still a very long time and it was time to paint a princess in a way that reflected the age she lived in."

ROSS

TEACHER, 83, STARTS AGAIN

ASHLAND, Ky. (AP) — At 83, Robert W. Ross is returning to the classroom to see whether they teach mathematics the way he did.

He has enrolled for the fall term at Ashland Community College, where he will attend a calculus course three days a week.

"It will be good to be on the other side of the desk again," said Ross, known to his friends as the "professor." He was a teacher more than 40 years.

"You ever want to let the knowledge get away. . . . You always need to keep in touch with it," he said.

Navy Vacuums Oil-Slicked Bay

When it gets dirty, just vacuum it.

"This is one of the most beautiful harbors in the world," a spokesman said Thursday, "and the Navy wants to keep it so, but with some 90 ships in and out of the harbor every day, occasionally one of them will spill some oil."

He said the chore of vacuum cleaning the bay was contracted earlier this month to Pepper Industries of nearby National City, whose marine division also cleans the bilges and fuel tanks of ships.

John Hillis, Pepper's marketing manager, said oil spills can be removed faster with chemicals, but to prevent damage to marine ecology, a physical method like the vacuum system is preferable.

The vacuum sucks oil-laden water through hoses into tanks on the barge where the water and oil naturally separate, Hillis explained. The water is then pumped out and the oil is reclaimed.

Snake Causes Short

BLUE SPRINGS, Mo. (AP) — A four-foot-long black snake caused a short circuit at a Missouri Public Service Co. substation and left about 1,000 customers without power for a while. Richard Strate, company spokesman, said the snake crawled up a steel girder and short-circuited a main breaker switch. The 12,000-volt charge knocked the snake off the tower. Repairmen found it stunned but alive, coiled on a concrete slab.

A CLASSIFIED AD IS LIKE HAVING YOUR OWN PRIVATE GENIE

Dreaming of a Genie? Many people have found him in the magic of the Classified Ads. Wouldn't you call it "magic" if you could turn that extra bedroom furniture into living room drapes . . . your old refrigerator into a new summer outfit . . . sporting equipment into power tools . . . outgrown bicycles and toys into a musical instrument? Classified Ads find cash buyers for items you no longer want so you have extra money for today's needs.

Try using the "Classified Ad Genie" yourself. Make a list of things you no longer use, but that would be worth cash to someone else. Then dial 386-2121 for a friendly Ad Writer who helps you word your ad for prompt results and at very little cost.

Don't Delay
Put a Classified Ad "Genie" to work bringing you extra money for better living today!

5 DEATHS, FUNERALS

BRYON—Suddenly in Ottawa, Ont., on Sunday, Aug. 16, 1970, Naval Lieutenant Norman Edwin Bryon of 763-A Springland Drive, Ottawa, aged 47. Dearly beloved husband and father, he is survived by his wife, Anne, and 4 children—Laura, Elizabeth, Norman and James, all at home. Born in North Battleford, Sask., Lieut. Bryon was a former resident and constant admirer of Victoria, having served in ships and establishments of the Royal Canadian Navy's Pacific Command at Esquimalt, B.C. He was a member of Virgin Lodge No. 3, A.F. & A.M., G.R.N.S.

A memorial service was held in Trinity Anglican Church on Wednesday, Aug. 19, 1970, at Ottawa, Rev. H. Southcott and Padre D. Fuller officiating. A military funeral will be held at 10:30 hours, Monday, Aug. 24, from the Church of St. Andrew at Canadian Forces Base, Esquimalt (Naden), Padre J. A. Roberts officiating, with interment in the Veterans' Cemetery. (Flowers gratefully declined). Friends, if desired, may donate to the Canadian Heart Foundation). HAYWARD'S FUNERAL CHAPEL in charge of arrangements.

CROSS—In Vancouver, B.C., on Aug. 12, 1970, Mrs. Fanny B. Cross, widow of Mr. W. D. Cross, survived by two sons, Elgin W. and Garfield W. of Vancouver, B.C., and one daughter, Mrs. A. R. (Marion) Phelps of Victoria, B.C.

HARLING—At Vancouver, Wash., on Aug. 20, 1970, Ethel Maud Harling, aged 77, of 2145 Lorne Terrace, a resident of Victoria for many years. Predeceased by her husband, Bernard Harling in 1962. Survived by a daughter, Mrs. Eileen P. Malcolm, Vancouver, Wash.; three sons, Harry, of Port Arthur, Ont., Lloyd, of Victoria, and David Harling, of Vancouver, B.C.; a stepson, Bernard Harling, Kelowna; also nine grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

Funeral service Monday at 3:30 p.m. in HAYWARD'S FUNERAL CHAPEL, 734 Broughton St., Rt. Rev. Bishop D. A. G. Rankilor officiating. Interment in Hatley Memorial Gardens. Supervised parking adjoining the chapel.

PETERSEN—At St. Joseph's Hospital on Aug. 17, 1970, Christian William Petersen, aged 69, of 5-1256 Yates Street; born at Mastrup, Denmark, and a resident of Victoria for several years. Funeral service Monday at 1 p.m. in HAYWARD'S FUNERAL CHAPEL, 734 Broughton Street, Rev. Frederick Otke officiating. Interment in Royal Oak Burial Park.

PORTER — In Victoria, B.C., on August 20th, 1970, Mrs. Frederica Louise Porter, aged 87 years. Born in Petitcodiac, New Brunswick, formerly of Sidney, B.C. Predeceased by her husband, Peter Mitchell Porter on December 22, 1962.

Arrangements will be announced later by the Sands Funeral Chapel of Roses, Sidney, B.C.

9 IN MEMORIAM

CUNNINGHAM — Michael John, who passed away Aug. 21, 1968.
Quietly remembered every day,
Sadly missed along life's way;
Just as you were you'll always be.
Treasured in our memory.
—Missed by loving daughter and mother and family.

HAMILTON—In loving memory of a dear son and brother, John Wayne Hamilton, who was suddenly taken away August 21, 1966.
We miss you because we loved you,
More precious than wealth untold;
No treasure on earth can replace you,
Your memory will never grow old.
—Always remembered and sadly missed by Mom, Dad, Bill and Janet.

MOSS — Ever remembering our dear Mother who went to her Eternal Rest August 21, 1969.
Mother's love once blessed us here
For she walked so long beside us
Sharing every smile and tear;
Thankful for the joy the past has brought us
But can never take away,
For the sweet and gracious memories
Growing dearer every day.
For the faith that keeps us patient
Looking at the things unseen
For the hope of that glad meeting
Far from mortal grief and pain
We thank Thee Lord Jesus
For the blessings that remain.
—The Family.

TURNER — In cherished memory of my beloved husband, Charles Stanley Turner, who passed away August 21st, 1966.
—Sadly missed and lovingly remembered, Dora.

YATES — In loving memory of our dear dad, Norman Yates, who passed away Aug. 21, 1957.
In life you were very dear to us,
In death you are just as dear,
Every day no matter where,
Deep in our hearts you are always there.
—Always remembered and sadly missed by his daughters Lilian and Edith and grandson Ray.

Tonight's Top Television Shows

HIGH CHAPARRAL, 7:30 p.m., Channel 5, "The Long Shadow." (Repeat) Good episode. Somebody is out to get the Cannons and the villian seems to be sabotaging the entire ranch operation. With hired hands either quitting in fear or mysteriously disappearing, there are enough suspects to keep fans absorbed and guessing. When the plot is finally foiled, we even learn a little bit about John Cannon's past.

* * *

GET SMART, 7:30 p.m., Channel 7. (Repeat) An amiable little outing in which a KAOS agent is a dead ringer for 99. The mistaken identity idea is played to the hilt as the agent pretends to be Mrs. Smart who will poison her hubby. Being brighter than Max, 99 warns him and then watched him blossom in the company of the agent. Miss Feldon gets a workout here and that's a help.

* * *

HE AND SHE, 8 p.m., Channel 7. (Repeat). A fairly amusing dinner given for cartoonist Dick's boss and his wife is the theme of the entry. Jokes about a previous dinner draw chuckles, setting the stage for a current fiasco involving poisoned fish. Though the situation may be far-fetched, the dialogue works and Alice Ghostley's role as the boss' wife adds flavor.

* * *

HERE COME THE BRIDES, 9 p.m., Channel 4. "The Soldier." (Repeat). Tonight's episode is a drama and it features a fine performance by Steve Ihnat as a bitter soldier who sets out to avenge the killing of the cavalry outfit's mascot, a tame bear. Jeremy shot the bear, believing it to be the killer he was stalking and the suspense mounts as the soldier tracks Jeremy for the kill.

THE GHOST AND MRS. MUIR, 8:30 p.m., Channel 4. "Amateur Night." (Repeat). Fans of the series will get a big charge out of the makeshift variety show the inhabitants of Schooner Bay put on to raise money for an old seamen's home. The sight of Mrs. Muir and Claymore doing a duet to a recording of "Italian Street Song" and Martha the housekeeper, pulling out all stops for "Some of These Days," should be enough inducement for regulars.

* * *

THE NAME OF THE GAME, 8:30 p.m., Channel 5. "Man of the People." (Repeat). Strong performances by Vera Miles and Fernando Lamas sustain your interest in the episode for the full 90 minutes. Vera is a reporter for People Magazine, and Fernando, a former romance of hers, is a highly successful Mexican builder in California. An idol of his people, Lamas is the target of Vera's investigatory journalism, and she's a gal with a nose for news as well as a woman spurned.

* * *

NET PLAYHOUSE, 8:30 p.m., Channel 9. "Flowering Cherry." (Repeat). Though this early Robert Bolt play may be disappointing as a work by the author of "A Man for All Seasons." it is of interest nevertheless. Essentially, it is the study of a man who manages to cover up his devastating weakness and immaturity, by soliciting sympathy for a dream he has never been able to fulfill. Bernard Lee overacts unmercifully in the role of this childish braggart, but Margaret Tyzack (remember her magnificent Winifred in "The Forsyte Saga") as his loyal and intelligent wife saves the play and gives the evening some dimension.

TONIGHT'S MOVIES

6:00 Channel 13: The Tartar Invasion (1960 Italian-French Adventure), Yoko Tani, Akim Tamiroff. Tartar invasion of 17th-century Poland.

8:00 Channel 8: Blindfold (1966 Adventure), Rock Hudson, Claudia Cardinale, Psychologist is contacted by a security officer to treat a mentally disturbed scientist.

11:00 Channel 12: The Fugitive Kind (1959 Drama), Marlon Brando, Anna Magnani. Joanne Woodward. A drifter stirs up controversy in a small Mississippi town.

11:30 Channel 7: The Mummy's Tomb (1942 Melodrama), Lon Chaney, Jr. An Egyptian fanatic brings a mummy back to life.

YOUR HEALTH: Dr. Walter Alvarez

Today there is a new type of medical skill, which has to do with the study of the fetus in the mother's womb. Study and treatment of an infant begins during his pre-natal life. For instance, I was just reading how a woman with a marked Rh tendency, in which the mother, during pregnancy, develops a change in her blood that is likely to kill her infant before birth or soon after birth, can have the severity of her disease estimated early in her pregnancy by measuring the amount of bilirubin, a bile pigment in the amniotic fluid, which is the fluid that surrounds the fetus in the womb.

With this measurement, the physician can find out if the infant is in great danger, and if so, a large amount of the harmful type of blood is then removed from the mother and helpful transfusions are given to the infant in the womb. In the report that I read, five such women, as a result of this method, were able to give birth to live infants, and four of these infants survived. They probably would not have survived without the help of the new treatment.

There are several other diseases in which this new sicence of fetal medicine is helpful. For instance, if a woman has a tendency to have boys with the terrible bleeding disease, hemophilia, in which the blood does not clot properly so that any little cut or severe bump can cause the boy nearly to bleed to death, and she does not want to bring into the world a child who will have a great deal of suffering until perhaps he dies in his early twenties, an expert can now find out during pregnancy whether the child is a boy or a girl. If it is a girl, the mother does not have to worry, because girls rarely get the disease; but if it is a boy, she must worry, and she may choose not to carry the fetus to term, but to have an abortion.

In other cases, a woman pregnant after the age of 40 may want to know whether or not she is going to have a markedly feeble-minded mongoloid child. The statistics show that after 40, her chances of bearing a mongloid child become considerably higher than are those of a younger woman. If the tests indicate that she is going to have a mentally retarded child, she may choose not to bring the handicapped child into the world.

As the new methods of studying and treating fetuses develop, there will be less chance of families having to go through the grief and hearbreak of having defective children.

Teens Crack World Marks In U.S. Meet

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Three teen-age swimming stars, Debbie Meyer, Alice Jones and John Kinsella, shattered world records in rapid order at the United States Amateur Athletic Union swimming championships Thursday night.

Kinsella, a 17-year-old from Oakbrook, Ill., led from start to finish of the 400-metre freestyle to win in 4:02:81. That bettered the 4:04 world record set last year by West Germany's Hans Fassnacht.

Miss Meyer lowered her own record to 4:24.34 from the 4:24.50 she set in the same pool during the trials for the 1968 Olympics, where she won three gold medals.

Miss Jones, an 18-year-old University of Cincinnati co-ed, won her first national title, and in doing it swam the butterfly in 1:04.11, lowering the record of 1:04.50 set in 1965 by Ada Kok of The Netherlands.

Driver Hurt As Car Burns

LE MANS, France (AP) — Derek Bell, British racing car driver, suffered burns on his face and hands Wednesday when his Ferrari 512 burst into flames during a filming sequence on the Le Mans circuit.

Bell's injuries were described as superficial, but the $45,000 car was a total wreck. The driver is playing a role in the American film "24 Hours of Le Mans," starring Steve McQueen.

Wiehe Sets Pace In Golf Tourney

BELLINGHAM (AP) Rick Weihe of Bellingham led the field Thursday after the second day of play in the Washington State amateur golf championship at the Bellingham Golf and Country Club.

Weihe finished the par-71 course with a 68 for a total of 139. He was one stroke over the first nine but birdied four holes on the back nine to wind up three under par.

Jim Frost and Steve Cole, both of Seattle, were tied for second at 140.

No-League Team Signs Ex-Argo

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Columbia Chargers Football Club, a newly-organized professional team as yet without a league to play in, has announced the signing of tackle Brian Murphy, formerly with Toronto Argonauts of the Canadian Football League.

Bobby Davis, the club's owner and president, said the Chargers have a 12-game exhibition schedule with Seattle Cavaliers, Everett Ramblers, the University of B.C., Simon Fraser University and Monroe State College.

He said he has hopes that the club will enter the Continental Football League in the future.

Remes Retained By Soccer Refs

Danny Girvin was returned as secretary-treasurer during the association's annual meeting and Ken Baggott was elected to the post of vice-president.

Men interested in officiating this season are invited to call either Remes (385-6621) or Art Shaw (592-3189).

Gulls Get Spencer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — San Diego Gulls of the Western Hockey League have acquired defenceman Irv Spencer, 32, from Detroit Red Wings of the National League. No price was revealed in the announcement by the Gulls' coach Max McNab.

HOME GARDEN

New Concept for Shared Project

By HILDA BEASTALL

A brand new concept for shared gardening was suggested by a reader whom I met at a recent flower show. While new to me, this former homeowner-gardener had come across it herself more or less by accident some little while ago.

After giving up her own garden for an apartment it came to her attention that if she could have had the part time assistance of another interested gardener it would have been quite possible to carry on in the former location.

After a few weeks of being away from gardening she chanced to contact a couple who were also contemplating a move to an apartment — for the same reason as herself, too much gardening.

Hilda

So our lady propounded her idea — suppose she took over a designated area of the garden for raising some vegetables?

She would supply her own plants and seeds, fertilizers and other additives, and in return for water used and other sharing privileges would donate such of her garden produce as the owners would like to share with her.

During periods of absence on the part of the garden owners, the apartment lady, as we'll call her, would see that watering and lawn cutting was done by the outside help employed for this purpose.

The idea was not jobbing gardening, but as a shared garden, or as participating gardening, as another gardener expressed it.

Realistically I can see all kinds of pitfalls, snags, and problems which might occur; but idealistically the plan has merit.

In practice I have known a 75-year-old ex-large-garden owner who just could not bear giving up all gardening activity when she moved into an apartment.

Each week, all the year round she made a trip by bus out to Sidney to work in her niece's garden. The heavy basic work was done according to her suggestions, as was any daily attention.

Vegetables and fruits were shared according to her requirements, and so pleased was this participating gardener with the arrangement that usually she was seen carrying some purchased plant donation for her shared garden.

This is the only alternative to my pet theme of redesigning the garden while we are yet able to do so. Either redesign for less labor in the future, or consider this participating gardening as not so wild as it may seem.

I would be pleased to have comments on this idea and more suggestions as to how it could be worked out in a practical way.

It Was a Return to Old West

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — The No. 37 Castle Shannon trolley brought about 50 suburban commuters into the city Wednesday. It turned out like a wild west stage coach ride.

The trolley jerked to a halt when the motorman, Harry Bouvy, 27, spotted a log blocking the track. Bouvy, thinking it was a teenage prank, climbed out to remove the log.

"Get back in there, and tell the people to throw out their wallets!"

Then, Bouvy decided to make a break for it. The trolley lurched forward, smashing the log. The passengers hit the floor, fearing they would be shot.

"It was a bumpy ride and for a second I thought we had derailed," the motorman said. "But the car kept on going."

KARPIN ON BRIDGE

By FRED L. KARPIN

In the deal presented today, our South declarer came up with two plays which, at first glance, may appear to be of the "grandstanding" variety: he "wasted" two aces. On examination, however, it will be observed that his plays were the only correct ones.

Neither side vulnerable. East deals.

♠ 4 2
♡ Q J 10
◇ A J 10 9 7 3

WEST
♠ 9 8 7 5 3
♡ 7 4
◇ Q 6 5 4
♣ 9 3

♠ Q J 10
♡ K 9 8 6 3
◇ 8 2

SOUTH
♡ A 5 2
◇ K
♣ J 8 6 5 4 2

The bidding:

| East | South | West | North |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♡ | Pass | Pass | 2 ◇ |
| Pass | 3 NT | Pass | Pass |
| Pass | | | |

Opening lead: Seven of ♡.

The ten of hearts was played from dummy on the opening lead, and East made the correct play when he declined to put up his king. Had he played it, South would have had two entries to dummy in the queen and jack of hearts.

But South countered East's play by winning the trick with his ace. He then led his diamond king, and overtook it with dummy's ace. He next led the diamond jack, discarding a spade from his own hand as West captured the trick with his queen.

West now shifted to the club nine, and East's queen won the trick after the seven-spot was played from dummy. East returned the spade queen, South's ace winning.

A heart was now led to dummy's jack, and when East took the king, simultaneously dummy's queen was promoted into an entry to the board. When play had ended, South had made two spades, two hearts and five diamonds. It would have been another story if declarer had permitted dummy's ten of hearts to have captured the opening lead. It would now have become impossible for him to have reached the board after dummy's diamonds had become established.

And, of course, if at trick two South had not overtaken his singleton king of diamonds with dummy's ace, dummy's to-be-established diamonds would have languished in dummy for the duration of the deal.

If South had not overtaken the king with the ace, he would next have led a heart to the board's jack, East taking the trick with his king. Upon regaining the lead, South would have entered dummy via the heart queen, and laid down the diamond ace. With the queen failing to drop, South would make only two diamond tricks, the ace and king.

As South actually played the hand, however, he didn't have to rely on catching the diamond queen. In short, he didn't have to be lucky.

HIJACKER NEVER ENTERED COCKPIT

Threat Detours Airliner

MIAMI (AP) — A stocky Latin man who said he had a bomb in his lap hijacked a jetliner carrying 81 persons to Cuba Thursday without entering the cockpit.

The plane's pilot, Capt. Robert Hedgecock, never saw the man until Cuban officials hustled the hijacker off the plane and snatched the brown attache case in which he claimed he had an explosive device.

Hedgecock, 40, of Atlanta, said his Delta Air Lines plane had just levelled off at 9 p.m. EDT, after takeoff from Atlanta to Savannah, Ga., when stewardess Judy James, 22, also of Atlanta, told him of the man with the bomb.

In an interview at Miami International Airport after they returned from Cuba at 2:51 a.m. today, Miss James said the man first approached her at the rear buffet as he came out of a lavatory.

"Look at me when I talk to you and don't panic," the pretty blonde said he told her in Spanish-accented English.

RELAYED MESSAGE

"I have an explosive device and I'll use it. Inform your captain to head for Havana."

She went to the cockpit with the message and said Hedgecock replied: "Tell the man that we're going to Havana and ask him if he would like to come up in the cockpit."

The pilot said the man declined the invitation, apparently because "he didn't want others to know he was the hijacker."

The rest of the flight, Hedgecock sent notes to the man by Miss James and the husky six-footer gave his orders quietly from his seat near the rear of the DC-9.

The pilot said he wanted to keep the hijacker's identity in case other passengers might try to overpower him.

Passengers said stewardesses told them the plane had not landed at Savannah on time because it had been delayed by a strong headwind and thunderstorms.

When the hijacker's identity became known to those around him just before landing at Jose Marti Airport in Havana, he told one person he was from Peru.

"He said he had done this before," said Dennis Owens, a Savannah engineer.

A Pill for Losing All Your Hair?—Baa!

MILWAUKEE (AP) — It's not unusual for a 16-year-old girl to shear a sheep. But it is unusual when she does it without any kind of shearing instrument.

The lamb was fed a new defleecing drug, cyclophosphamide, 10 days ago.

Dr. A. L. Pope, a University of Wisconsin professor of meat and animal science, described the drug as an antimetabolite. It causes a temporary cessation of wool or hair growth.

McKerrow volunteered his sheep for experiments on the belief that the drug might help overcome the shortage of qualified sheep shearers and eliminate the need for expensive shearing equipment.

Herbicides to Improve With Clean Chemicals

By FRANK CAREY

WASHINGTON (AP) — A team of Texas researchers said today it has developed chemicals which could increase the effectiveness of herbicides while decreasing environmental pollution.

The chemicals, called "water-degradable polymers," also could be used as a pharmaceutical aid or in the packaging industry, the researchers said.

M. L. Beasley and R. L. Collins, both of Austin Science Associates Inc., told of the development in a report to the technical journal Science.

Polymers are compounds created by the union of two or more similar molecules. The new compound has the same elements as the original but possesses a higher molecular weight and has different physical properties.

STICKS TO PLANTS

The new polymers differ from those already discovered in that they break down in the presence of moisture.

The chemicals, when combined with conventional herbicides, produce a sticky resin which can be applied to plants.

The researchers said conventional weed and insect killers pollute water supplies because rain and irrigation water washes away much of the chemical.

Farmers thus must use 10 times as much pesticide as would be normally needed, they said.

Tests of a polymerized 2,4-D on grazing lands in Kansas "showed exceptional control" of weeds at application rates of one pound an acre.

"No evidence for migration of herbicide was found," the researchers said.

Because the new chemicals break down slowly in the presence of moisture, they conceivably could be used with medicines that need to be slowly released within the body.

They also could be used in conjunction with conventional packaging materials, the researchers said.

The two scientists said "This wide class of water-degradable polymers offers great promise for the controlled release of herbicides, insecticides . . . fungicides, rodenticides, defoliants and pharmaceuticals."

But they warned that "benign" polymeric formations would have to be found before they could be used with medicines.

both said union members should accept the Nemetz recommendations.

Duncan IWA president Weldon Jubenville said:

"If they (Bennett and Peterson) are really interested in industrial peace I suggest they keep their snouts right out of it."

Bennett said in Kelowna:

"As premier of the province I am asking the negotiating committee to reconsider and recommend acceptance."

Peterson said Thursday he found it hard to understand why the union leaders recommended rejection of the report.

"I think it should be remembered that the IWA was the party that suggested in the first instance that Mr. Justice Nemetz undertake this task," he said.

"We have acceded to their request, selected the man they wanted, and if they are thinking of using this report as a stepping-stone for greater awards, they are barking up the wrong tree."

Commenting on the telegram at noon today, Peterson revealed he spoke with Moore Thursday night and early today.

The labor minister appeared to feel Moore and the IWA negotiating committee will not oppose his involvement in the dispute despite a statement Thursday by Duncan IWA president Weldon Jubenville.

'People—Not Industry' Major Pollution Threat

VANCOUVER (CP) — Individuals pose a greater threat to the environment than industrial operations, the former head of the B.C. pollution control branch said Thursday.

Charles J. Keenan said the public has been conditioned by press reports to believe that "we face an environmental disaster" caused by industry.

"This is just not true and all of the evidence available points to local areas of stress, almost exclusively associated with people and their centres of population," he said.

"In short, masses of people and their individual activities appear to be the source of greatest concern.

"The private automobile and the home furnace place more stress on the assimilative faculties of the atmosphere, as a whole, than do our industrial plants."

Mr. Keenan, now a private consultant, made the comments to the inquiry into pollution by the B.C. forest industry.

EIGHTH DAY

The inquiry, being conducted by W. N. Venables, present director of the pollution control branch, goes into its eighth day of hearings today.

Mr. Keenan criticized the negative attitude held by some groups toward the Pollution Control Act which he said provided an "excellent format for controlling pollution." He said he had helped prepare the act before it was passed into law by the provincial legislature in 1967.

Mr. Keenan said the forest industry should be allowed to discharge wastes into water and air only to the extent that these wastes could be absorbed by the environment.

He suggested it would be "unequitable and unreasonable" to expect mills in various geographical areas of the province to meet the same pollution control standards.

SPENDING PLANNED

G. S. Bowell, president of Rayonier Canada (B.C.) Ltd., told the inquiry his company plans to spend nearly $12 million on a water pollution abatement program at its Port Alice Pulp mill in the next eight years.

He said that water quality in Neroutsos Inlet "is admittedly degraded" by the discharge of all water effluents directly into the water from the plant.

The pollution program must take into account the mill's production obligations, revenue produced by the mill, the employment needs of the workers, and future social and aesthetic demands of the area, said Mr. Bowell.

He said the mill has been in operation since 1917 and is not impairing any recreational use with the effluent it was dispersing.

Dr. Bruce Fraser, spokesman for the Nelson chapter of the Kootenay Pollution Control Association, called on the government to recognize citizens' anti-pollution groups.

"Such recognition should be given so that the groups "might be effectively used to monitor the forest industry," he said.

CITIZEN VOICE

Mr. Fraser, a biological sciences professor at Selkirk College, told the inquiry some standard procedures should be worked out that would allow private citizens to report effectively to the pollution control board.

Colin Palmer, vice-chairman of the Powell River Anti-Pollution Association, told the inquiry he had affidavit evidence that a resident of the town had become sick on one occasion because of the odor from the MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. pulp mill.

Dr. J. H. Smith, director of the provincial government's division of occupational health, asked him whether the fact that one person becoming sick from the odor proved anything.

"I realize one person isn't a good test, but I am endeavoring to get more," he told Mr. Smith, a member of the inquiry's seven-man advisory panel.

Airline 'Sorry' For Flight Delay

CP Air apologized today for an overnight delay in a charter flight from England to Victoria earlier this week.

A spokesman for the company in Vancouver also said CP Air will investigate to see "this does not recur, in terms of the handling."

A series of delays and complications resulted in a number of the 250 passengers, most of them from Victoria and Vancouver Island, spending the night in Gatwick Airport. Several passengers have said they will complain to CP Air.

The company spokesman said the delay was caused by illness of a crew member and the required time before he could be replaced.

The accommodation problem was aggravated because another flight was delayed before CP Air's "and saturated accommodation in the Gatwick area," he said.

"I gather the situation was not as well handled as it might have been and for this we apologize."

He said Gatwick is not part of CP Air's regular schedule and the company relies on employees of other airlines "and the indications are this was not as well handled as we and the passengers would like it to be. In that respect, I guess all we can do is apologize. We have the greatest sympathy with their annoyance."

He said it was "an unusual combination of circumstances" which had not happened before.

reached — at least on non-monetary matters — over the weekend.

The postal workers have been staging rotating strikes for the last three months to support their demands, with the government retaliating by closing down regional offices in some areas affected by the strikes.

LOCAL PICTURE

Local post office and postal union officials today confirmed the current rotating strike will end Saturday morning when inside workers resume sorting operations.

Public service supervisor Leon Hall said there will probably be a rural mail delivery Saturday, with letter carriers to resume deliveries Monday.

"The situation is the same as it was yesterday," Hall said, "except Prince George has been suspended."

"Nobody seems to have any idea whether they'll be going back to work tomorrow, but we expect they will."

Marcel Boutin, Victoria branch president of the Letter Carriers Union said the phrase "indefinite time" which had been used to describe the current strike very likely did not apply to Greater Victoria postal outlets.

"That's how they phrased it from Vancouver but it looks as if the inside workers will go back tomorrow morning."

Vancouver strike headquarters was still awaiting word from Ottawa as to the duration of the strikes throughout the rest of the province.

The latest B.C. strikes started at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday in Vancouver and by Thursday morning had spread to all but 11 postal outlets in the province.

Today marks the fifth day Victoria's main post office has been closed since the rotating strike tactic began to be used by the Council of Postal Unions.

The main office has also been closed twice through suspensions of service which the government says are necessary because of lack of mail.

Canadian Exports Up 17 Per Cent

OTTAWA (CP)—Canadian exports rose 16.7 per cent to $8.58 billion in the first seven months of 1970 compared with the same period in 1969, Dominion Burea of Statistics said today.

Exports to the European Economic Community were up 44 per cent at $675 million, to the United Kingdom 36.2 per cent at $902 million, and to Japan 28.9 per cent at $478 million.

Exports to the United States were up 8.8 per cent at $6.49 billion.

July figures alone, compared with the same month in 1969, showed a rise of 82.8 per cent in exports to the United Kingdom, 79.7 per cent to the European Economic Community, 30.6 per cent to Japan and nine per cent to the United States.

The July total of $1.48 billion was 21.5 per cent above the $1.22 billion of July, 1969.

DBS said a $262 million increase was partly accounted for by increased shipments of nickel ores and aircraft to Britain and the EEC. Anticipation of a dock strike in Britain in late July also may have led to accelerated shipments to the country, the bureau said.

Larger exports of iron ores, crude petroleum, natural gas and nickel alloys helped account for the increase in exports to the U.S. Wheat shipments to Russia were about $20 million higher than in July, 1969.

Foreign Money At $46 Million

OTTAWA (CP) — Foreign investment in Canada at the end of 1969 was estimated at $46,000 million in preliminary figures for the year released today by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

This included $41,000 million in long-term foreign investment, showing an increase of about $3,500 million in long-term capital and re-invested earnings. Other shorter-term investments by non-residents brought the total of Canada's external liabilities to $46,000 million, the bureau said.

Offsetting the foreign investment was a flow of Canadian long-term investment abroad along with accrued earnings and other claims by Canadians on non-residents, which together totalled $18,000 million.

The figures for 1969 released by the bureau were described as preliminary estimates.

At the end of 1967, Canada's net indebtedness was $25,200 million, with gross foreign investment in Canada of $40,200 million and Canadian holdings abroad of $15,000 million.

The figures on long-term capital investment are given at their book value, which in many cases far underestimates their current value.

Police Court

A man charged with dangerous driving who told court he had never driven before was sentenced to two months in jail Thursday by Judge William Ostler.

Billy Arthur, 31, of 524 Constance was driver of a car during an incident early Thursday morning in which a female passenger suffered a miscarriage.

Ostler described the crime as "the most heinous" dangerous driving case he had ever judged. He said it was "simply miraculous" nobody else was hurt.

Arthur drove a car which knocked over a stop sign and a telephone pole before it disappeared down the road.

He was also banned from driving for one year.

The judge showed more sympathy to Douglas Brown, currently serving time, when he found out Brown, charged with false pretences, obtained $50 in toys for his children Christmas Eve.

"Are you resolved to put all this behind you and rejoin your family," Ostler asked.

Brown replied that his wife had said he must straighten out in order to return home.

"Well you wouldn't blame her, would you?" Ostler said. "It's pretty hard to be left with a family to look after with a husband in jail all this time."

He sentenced Brown to four months in jail, to be served concurrent to a present sentence.

Ostler originally ordered a six-month sentence, but shortened it when he discovered that Brown would get out of jail earlier for good behavior.

Thomas Price, 20, of Bremerton, Wash. told court he never intended to bring marijuana into Canada but mechanical trouble forced him to bring his 35-foot sailboat into Victoria.

He was arrested Aug. 20 when 4½ ounces of marijuana were found aboard the vessel is the Inner Harbor.

"I use the marijuana as a relaxer before I go to sleep," he told Ostler.

"We'd have been sailing about 150 miles off shore. I didn't even want to land in Canada."

"It's an offence in both countries, isn't it?" Ostler asked.

He fined Price $400.

Thomas Lamb, 30, of 832 Esquimalt Road, was sentenced to one day in jail and fined $100 for possessing stolen property worth more than $50.

He was given stolen eight-track stereo tapes as a wedding present, court was told at an earlier session.

B.C. Gazette Boosts Rates

Cost of placing official notices of fewer than 100 words will rise by 30 per cent from $5 to $6.50 and longer notices will increase in cost by a smaller percentage varying with length.

EMPRESS TO HOLD WHOOP-UP

The Empress Hotel will sponsor two days of public entertainment at the Causeway, Friday and Saturday, Sept. 4 and 5.

Activities will include street dances at 8 p.m. on both nights and singalongs and concerts Saturday afternoon from 3 to 6 p.m.

The hotel had sought a $200 grant from Victoria council to help with expenses for the event. But the request was refused at a meeting of council's finance committee Thursday.

Ald. Ove Witt said the money should come from the Victoria Visitors Bureau or the Chamber of Commerce.

THE WEATHER

More sunny, warm weather is predicted for Saturday.

The weather office at Victoria International Airport says temperatures will be in the low to mid 70s and in the mid 60s near the water.

Winds will be west 15 over the Juan de Fuca Strait.

Foreign Protection Cut In Half

NEW YORK (AP) — Police protection for foreign government interests in New York is to be cut nearly by half starting at midnight tonight.

Police Commissioner Howard Leary announced Thursday that 50 of 106 patrolmen assigned to diplomatic posts would be withdrawn at that time and protection at 17 of 37 locations housing foreign interests would be eliminated.

However, patrols outside the major United Nations missions and consulates are to be maintained at present levels, he said in a statement.

Under the revisions, the police department will discontinue assignments to locations where foreign personnel lack diplomatic immunity, he said, thus eliminating police guards at private buildings where foreign governments have purely financial or political interests.

In recent weeks, off-duty policemen have picketed to protest assignment to fixed diplomatic posts, shopkeepers have complained that such duties were keeping patrolmen from walking beats, and the city has unsuccessfully sought federal assistance in providing protection to foreign missions and consulates.

Measles on Rampage

LONDON (AP) — A wave of measles is sweeping England, the ministry of health announced. More than 10,000 cases are being reported every week. The ministry urged the mass vaccination of children.

'Family' Capers Bring Jail Term

VANCOUVER (CP) — Peter Metcalfe, 18, of Vancouver, found his place with The Family and Thursday it cost him two years less a day in Jail.

Defence lawyer Roger McAfee described The Family as a well-organized group of up to 40 adults who run a large breaking and entering operation in the city.

Metcalfe was sentenced for his part in 28 break-ins over a period of 14 months, involving goods and cash worth almost $30,000.

"He was flattered by the attention he was paid by The Family," said Mr. McAfee.

Home Recipe Plan Takes Off Ugly Fat

It's simple how quickly one may lose pounds of unsightly fat right in your own home. Make this home recipe yourself. It's easy, no trouble at all and costs little. Just go to your drugstore and ask for Naran. Pour this into a pint bottle and add enough grapefruit juice to fill the bottle. Take two tablespoonsful twice a day as needed and follow the Naran Reducing Plan.

If your first purchase does not show you a simple easy way to lose bulky fat and help regain slender more graceful curves; if reducible pounds and inches of excess fat don't disappear from neck, chin, arms, abdomen, hips, calves and ankles just return the empty bottle for your money back. Follow this easy way endorsed by many who have tried this plan and help bring back alluring curves and graceful slenderness. Note how quickly bloat disappears—how much better you feel. More alive, youthful appearing and active.

| 19 western oils | 172.35, | up 7.64 |

Volume, 2,148,000.

Strapping gain of 15.81 points was chalked up by the industrial index in active trading today on the New York Stock Exchange. The advance boosted the average up to 745.41. Over 13 million shares were traded.

Investors reacted after U.S. Treasury Secretary David Kennedy said late Thursday that the nation has already passed through its most difficult period of transition.

Under pressure from Wall Street the Toronto industrials also enjoyed an upswing with the index ahead 1.00 points. Strongest sectors were food processors, oil refining, pipelines and trust and loans.

AT TORONTO in industrials, Dome Pete rose 5 to 59½, Chrysler 2¼ to 21½, Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas 1½ to 40, Consolidated Bathurst 1½ to 11½ and B.C. Forest 1¼ to 25¼.

Falconbridge lost 1 to 131.

Hudson Bay Mining climbed ⅝ to 20⅝, Northgate ¼ to 10½, Bankeno 25 cents to $4.15 and Granisle ⅛ to 13⅛. Sherrit lost ⅛ to 17⅝, Opemiska ¼ to 11⅝, Brunswick 15 cents to $4.80 and Pine Point ⅛ to 33⅞.

Canadian Tricentral rose $2 to $8.50, Canadian Superior Oil 1⅞ to 35&, Great Plains 1 to 26, United Canso 80 cents to $4.70 and Ranger ⅝ to 10⅝.

AT NEW YORK winning issues led losers by a margin of more than 3 to 1.

Prices included Pennzoil United, up 1 at 23, General Motors, up 3⅛ at 71⅝, and Telex, up ⅝ to 9⅞.

AT MONTREAL prices on the stock market slipped lower in active early afternoon trading today.

MacMillan-Bloedel was off ¾ to 25¼, Bank of Nova Scotia ¼ to 18¾, Ivaco ⅛ to 7⅝ and Chemcell 20 cents to 4.25.

Among senior mines and oils, Falconbridge Nickel was ahead 1 to 133, Inco ½ to 40½, Shell Canada ½ to 29, Gulf Oil Co. ½ to 15c, Texaco Canada ½ to 24½, Northern and Central Gas ⅜ to 12½ and Aquitaine ¼ to 23¼.

Famous Players moved up 1½ to 10, Consolidated-Bathurst 1⅛ to 11¼, Alcan Aluminium ⅛ to 20⅞, Canadian Breweries ⅜ to 7⅞, Central Del Rio ⅜ to 10c, and Moore Corp. ⅜ to 29 ,

CPR advanced ¼ to 56 and Bell Canada ⅛ to 42⅛.

AT LONDON return of small buyers in mid-session on yield considerations today turned the stock market around and gains of ⅛ points replaced losses of ¼.

Industrials moved narrowly with no decisive trend being established. Prices generally tended lower on lack of interest.

Dome gained 9 points at 146 while Pacific Petroleum, Hollinger, Inco, Canadian Pacific and Brascan were among other Canadians to advance. Banks were also firm.

Southam Business Acquires National

MONTREAL (CP) — Southam Business Publications Ltd., a subsidiary of Southam Press Ltd., has announced the acquisition of privately-owned National Business Publications of Gardenvale, Que.

Cost of the purchase and sales volume of National were not disclosed.

National has 14 monthly and annual publications including Monetary Times, Pulp and Paper Magazine of Canada and Canadian Industrial Equipment News.

TODAY'S GRAIN PRICES

Declines were attributed largely to a more accurate report of the U.S. corn damage which indicated earlier reports were exaggerated.

Pit operations were quiet most of the day with commission houses on both sides of the market the main activity.

Canadian wheat exports Thursday consisted of 509,600 bushels to China and 44,527 to Japan.

Lakehead prices for class two and IGA wheat all were unchanged.

100,000-Hour Life For New Car Engine

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — Inventor Wallace Minto says his Freon-powered, pollution-fighting auto engine will run 100,000 hours, more than 50 times the life of the conventional internal combustion engine.

Minto, president of Kinetics Corp., announced earlier this week the signing of a contract with Nissan Motor Co., Ltd., of Japan, manufacturer of the Datsun automobile.

He said in an interview that about 100 of the engines will be placed in Datsun automobiles in 1972 for a year of highway testing.

The engine is much the same as the steam engines which powered such famous cars as the Stanley Steamer early in the century.

But it uses Freon instead of water to provide steam and Minto said he can get about three times as much horsepower from his engine as from an equivalent water steam engine.

"Our engine has only two moving parts, helical gears that turn when high pressure Freon is squirted against them," Minto said. "There's no transmission or drive shaft, so we save a great deal of weight there.

"You can use any kind of fuel to heat the boiler, but we prefer kerosene because it has no lead and emits very few pollutants."

Freon is a liquid chemical manufactured by DuPont Co. It flows into the boiler controlled by a solid state computer the size of a pack of cigarettes. Here it is converted to gas to be driven against the helical gears, then converted back to liquid through a condenser and used again.

Minto said the first production models probably will cost a good bit more than present Datsuns, but he added: "When we start mass producing these engines at a million a year or so, they should cost 10 to 20 per cent less than present cars. They're easier to make. . . .

"One possibility we're looking at is selling an engine and chassis, and letting the buyer replace the Fiberglas body every year or so."

Bowater

Better showing by the North American interests of Bowater Paper Corp. helped the London-based company improve its profits in the first six months compared with the same period of 1969.

The firm's profit before tax in the 1970 period was $24.75 million and the after-tax figure was $12.75 million, compared with 1969 levels of $23.5 million and $12 million respectively.

The company says it has had an unexpected setback in the floating Canadian dollar.

Dominion Textile

Dominion Textile Ltd. reports net earnings of $4.6 million or $1.76 a common share for the fiscal year ended June 30, down from $5 million or $1.93 a share in the corresponding period last year.

Total sales for the period were $167 million compared with $173 million last year.

The company said the 3.1-per-cent drop in sales resulted from "hesitancy" of the economy and stiff competition by imported textile goods from low-cost countries.

Kelly-Deyong

Kelly-Deyong Sound Corp. Ltd. reported in advance of its annual meeting a net loss of $37,981 for the year ended Feb. 28, its first year of operation as a public company.

In the report to shareholders, board chairman C. W. Kelly attributed the loss to lower profits from the sale of merchandise and to administrative costs incurred by consolidating the six companies which form the corporation.

Union Oil

Union Oil Co. of Canada Ltd. had net earnings of $2.68 million or 56.1 cents a share in the first half of 1970, compared with $3.95 million or 82.5 cents a share for the first six months of 1969.

Cash flow increased slightly to $9.96 million compared with $9.9 million.

President W. E. Farrar said the primary cause for lower earnings was an increase in expenses for more active and extensive exploration.

Canadian GE

Canadian General Electric Co. Ltd. reports a 24 per cent decline in earnings for the first half of the year, due mainly to a sharp drop in sales of consumer products:

Profit for the six months was $4.36 million or 53 cents a share, down from $5.74 million or 70 cents a share.

The company said there were also substantial losses associated with closing of color TV tube manufacturing operations.

Sales for the six months were $227.75 million, up 4 per cent from $219 million for the first half of 1969.

Pinto Joins U.S. Threat To The Bug

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Ford Motor Co. unveiled its sub-compact Pinto Thursday as American auto-makers step up their challenge to Volkswagen and other imports from the growing small-car market.

Henry Ford II, board chairman of Ford Motor Co., said 400,000 of the sporty Pintos will be sold the first year and that it will outsell Volkswagen during that time.

The Pinto is the third American sub-compact to challenge the imports that racked up more than 1,000,000 sales in the United States last year, mostly with cars smaller than American compacts.

American Motors got a five-month jump when it introduced its sub-compact Gremlin in April. All 25,000 of the original Gremlins have been sold, and American Motors now is preparing a new model.

General Motors has taken the wraps off its subcompact Vega and will put it into Chevrolet showrooms Sept. 10, a day before the Pinto goes on sale.

Prices for the Pinto and Vega have not been announced, but spokesmen said they will be near the $1,850 price tag on the Volkswagen. The Gremlin sells for $1,879.

The Pinto has a longish hood and short afterdeck fashioned after Ford's Mustang. It is available in only a two-door model.

Compromise Plan Would End IOS Fight

NEW YORK (WP) — A compromise plan which would return Bernard Cornfeld to the board of directors of Investors Overseas Services but keep control of the teetering mutual fund giant in the hands of the present management, is being proposed to head off a proxy fight between the two factions.

Under the proposal, Cornfeld, who was deposed as chairman of IOS in mid-May, would also become chairman of the Geneva-based company's sales subsidiary, with complete authority to rebuild the shrinking sales arm. LOS now has less than 6,000 salesmen around the world, compared with a high of more than 15,000 earlier this year.

Sir Eric Wyndham White, who replaced Cornfeld as chairman in the management shake-up, would retain that post. White, who has just left New York after meetings with bankers and Wall Street brokers, is said to be strongly opposed to any compromise which would remove him from that post.

Neither side has given a final answer to the proposal. Reached by telephone at his Geneva home, Cornfeld said Thursday he might compromise, but added that he would also have to become a member of IOS' executive committee and that the company would have to drop its proposed affiliation with International Controls Corp., of Fairfield, N.J. ICC President Robert Vesco has met with Cornfeld, but has failed to win him over.

Sources close to the company say the strength of the compromise plan lies in the fact that both Cornfeld and White are unsure of their ability to win a proxy fight. Cornfeld claims to have proxies for more than 25 million preferred shares, but that is still short of the two-thirds majority needed to unseat the present board and return him to power. IOS has about 41 million preferred shares outstanding, although only about 33 million were voted at the annual meeting on June 30. Preferred shareholders, who are mostly IOS salesmen and other insiders, elect 18 of the company's 27 directors.

Many Stockholders Take Court Action

NEW YORK (AP) — More and more stockholders are turning to the courts in an effort to recoup some of the losses they've suffered during a 21-month bear market, legal experts report.

"The fact that they've taken a beating in the market during the last year and a half definitely has led to the increasing number of suits against brokerage houses and corporations," said Stanley K. Kaufman, a New York lawyer who has handled many stockholder actions.

Some experts in securities law estimate that several hundred stockholder suits have been filed across the United States.

Alan R. Bromberg, a professor at Southern Methodist University who specializes in securities law, says:

"With major companies going under there is going to be a tremendous number of new suits against anybody who's got any money left."

Although the legal experts say the declining market and recent brokerage house failures gave impetus to new stockholder litigation, the liberal interpretation of federal securities laws and regulations by the courts is cited by some as an important contributing factor.

MORE EXPECTED

In Houston recently, a judge held that the trustee for a company reorganizing under the federal bankruptcy laws has the authority to sue the principals on behalf of all the stockholders.

"I think you're going to see much more of this where the trustees are trying to recover for the shareholders and the company when the insiders have manipulated the stock," Bromberg said.

Recently a New York man sued a brokerage house for "churning" his account. Churning, or excessive trading in order to earn commissions, has been illegal for many years but legal sources said recovery in the past usually was limited to the amount of commissions.

In this case, however, the judge observed that "horses would have given the plaintiff a fairer opportunity to realize on his investment," and the man was awarded the full amount of his losses.

A growing number of suits are being brought under a section of the 1934 Federal Securities Act, which provides for forfeiture of profits realized on the "short swing," that is, the purchase and sale of securities by company insiders in a period of less than six months.

Under this section the insider who makes a profit on "in-and-out" transactions in his company's securities is assumed to be using corporate information that hasn't been disclosed to the public and the profit, therefore, belongs to the corporation. A "sale" might simply be the exchange of shares in a corporate merger.

WARSAW PACT SUMMIT MEETING

Bonn-Moscow Treaty Hailed

MOSCOW (Reuters) — Leaders of the seven Warsaw pact countries hailed the new Soviet-West German non-aggression pact and said today it represents a major step toward relaxing European tension.

Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Hungary, Poland, Romania and the Soviet Union made the declaration in a communique after their one-day summit in Moscow Thursday.

The communique, published by the Soviet news agency Tass, said the Bonn-Moscow talks and the signing of the treaty nine days ago were "a major step on the road towards relaxation of the tension and normalization of the situation in Europe."

The Kremlin's partners approved the new treaty slightly more than a week after West German Chancellor Willy Brandt flew to Moscow to sign the accord renouncing the use of force and respecting the inviolability of existing European frontiers.

The five-hour meeting Thursday reviewed the non-aggression treaty's implications for the Communist alliance and latest prospects for a European security conference.

The communique said the leaders "expressed firm intention to take further steps . . . aimed at strengthening European security."

It added they would take active measures "for implementation in the nearest future of the proposal on convocation of an all-European security conference . . . which is enlisting ever wider support."

A European conference to fulfill Warsaw pact aims could serve to enhance East Germany's status and further consolidate on a European scale the positions reached in bilateral negotiation between Bonn and Moscow.

Observers said that East German party chief Walter Ulbricht who attended the summit, likely will seek further support among his allies for his campaign for full recognition of East Germany by the non-Communist world.

RUMBLINGS OF DISCONTENT

Heath's Honeymoon Ending

LONDON (CP) — The first faint rumblings of discontent within the governing Conservative party about the performance of Prime Minister Heath's administration are becoming evident at the grassroots level and elsewhere.

Robert McCrindle, a backbench Conservative MP, warned Thursday night that the "honeymoon" period of the Heath government following the June 18 general election will be over in a few weeks.

Already "some discontent" can be heard in the constituencies because a new approach to Britain's economic problems has not yet made itself apparent, McCrindle said.

"My post bag is full (of letters) about price increases, real or threatened, mainly affecting the nationalized industries," he added.

As McCrindle spoke, more such increases, this time affecting some tickets on the nationalized British railways, were being announced.

They followed controversy this week in London concerning rises in fares charged by the capital's transit system.

Meanwhile, Heath himself has been on holiday in various parts of the country, amid continuing public nervousness about labor unrest as well as about the economy generally.

He returned to his official home at 10 Downing Street in London Thursday to do paper work but was expected to leave again today for a further period of participation in his favorite sport, sailing.

But the new round of sailing extends into next week and Heath's holiday period now has been under way since the beginning of August.

The pro-Conservative Daily Sketch today takes editorial note of the prime minister's vacation time and says that "he has deliberately refused to rush back to London and go through empty motions of frantic activity."

"That was (former prime minister) Harold Wilson's style and Mr. Heath despises it," says The Sketch.

But it also argues that "Britain is in a mess and a lot of people . . . are worried because the government seems to be doing so little about it."

Heath already has been warned by Conservative MP John Hunt of possible revolts against the government if proposed increases in postal charges are implemented.

SUDSY SECRET UNCAPPED

In a year of secret drinking he got through 2,666 bottles of his firm's beer. Every time he drank a bottle, Sullivan carefully replaced the cap and put the empty back in stock.

His illicit drinking spree was discovered when for the first time in five years he failed to report to work, and the hoard of empties was found.

"I drank all the beer myself over a period after my wife's death," Sullivan explained in court Thursday. He pleaded guilty to stealing the beer and was ordered held over on bail for probation reports.

MEXICO BORDER SETTLED AT LAST

PUERTO VALLARTA, Mexico (AP) — Meeting in an atmosphere of fiesta, Presidents Nixon and Gustavo Diaz Ordaz agreed Thursday night to end 122 years of U.S.-Mexican border disputes resulting from the shifting Rio Grande.

They hoped to end territorial controversy forever between their two nations by setting the boundary between Texas and Mexico in the centre of the Rio Grande.

"Two people married by geography should have no problems in delineating our borders," Diaz Ordaz told reporters.

Since the end of the war between Mexico and the United States in 1848, the constant shifting of the Rio Grande has generated endless squabbling by putting small parcels of land first in one country and then in the other.

After the presidential announcement, White House Press Secretary Ronald Ziegler told reporters the two governments had worked out a system of "compensating factors" which would come into play whenever the river bed shifts.

Italian Holidays Have Shopper on Warpath

ROME (AP) — Rome and Milan are faced with a shoppers' revolt, because their favorite neighboring shopkeepers have hung up a closed-for-holidays sign and vanished to the nearest beach.

"The music is always the same: Closed for holidays," says Rome's Communist newspaper Paese Sera. "The pork butcher has betrayed you and your grated cheese has moved 200 metres down the street to another shop.

"But in the process, you have to walk a kilometre for milk—in the other direction."

"This is the consequences of giving vacations to everyone in the space of one or two weeks," says Milan's independent Cordiere Della Sera. "Sometimes the vegetable man just shuts down on his own, unilaterally, leaving the consumer high and dry."

At the root of the shutdowns is the lack of staggered vacations in Italy, and growing agitation from shopkeepers for a short work week. Most neighborhood shops stay open six days a week. And it is not infrequent to see shoppers sneaking under a half-closed shutter on Sunday morning for a bottle of olive oil or some fresh pasta.

In Milan, the prefect—governor—decided Monday morning would serve as the weekly holiday. Another purpose of the holiday is to save overtime pay to employees, whose recent labor contract has reduced work to 5½ days a week.

Despite the new contract, the shopkeepers association says, employees in Italy work longer hours than in New York, Paris, Moscow, Brussels and Bonn. Employees currently work 43 hours a week, and will not be down to 40 hours until 1973.

Fatal Sub Crash Probed by French

TOULON, France (Reuters) — Naval officials began an official inquiry today into the collision between a French and a South African submarine that killed six French sailors and injured four others.

The collision Thursday night about a mile from shore during Mediterranean naval exercises left a 40-foot-long hole in the side of the French submarine Galatee, which was later beached.

The South African submarine Maria van Riebeeck, sold to South Africa by France July 24 amid international protests, returned to port under its own power with no injuries reported.

The 850-ton Maria van Riebeeck, South Africa's first submarine was returning to port when it collided with the Galatee, which was heading out to sea.

A defence ministry spokesman said both vessels were on the surface, but gave no other details. Unconfirmed reports said there was an explosion aboard one of the submarines before the collision.

A French Navy spokesman said attempts would be made today to refloat the Galatee. Tugs and a salvage ship already were at the site.

The South African submarine was handed over at the Atlantic port of Lorient amid an international storm over supplies of arms to the republic, which practises apartheid (race segregation).

The 850-ton submarine is one of three ordered from France which will form the nucleus of a South African force to guard the sea route around the Cape of Good Hope.

Both the Maria van Riebeeck and the Galatee, completed in 1964, belong to the Daphne Class designed for anti-submarine warfare.

FIRE HAZARD EXTREME IN B.C. INTERIOR

VANCOUVER (CP) — Hot windy weather in central and eastern British Columbia has raised the forest fire hazard in much of the area to extreme, a forestry department official said today.

During the past 24 hours, 27 new fires broke out in the Prince George, Kamloops and Nelson districts, bringing the total now burning in the province to 159.

A fire at Lytton which 10 days ago threatened the town is still burning.

Peterson Intervenes In B.C. Woods Dispute

Requests Sides To Delay Voting

Provincial Labor Minister Leslie Peterson has personally intervened in British Columbia's coast forest industry dispute in an attempt to prevent a shutdown.

He has asked both management and the union to suspend voting on the recommendations for settlement contained in the Nemetz report released earlier this week, pending further study.

In a telegram to Jack Moore, regional president of the 27,000-member International Woodworkers of America, and John Billings, president of Forest Industrial Relations, which represents 116 coast companies, Peterson said:

"I am alarmed at the position taken by the parties both officially and unofficially in respect to the Nemetz report.

"In view of the importance of the forest industry to the economy of the province, the government recommends that further study be given by the parties to the full implications of the Nemetz report.

URGES MEET

"I will be prepared to meet separately with the parties if they so wish during the course of the next 10 days. In the meantime I would ask that a vote on the acceptance or rejection of the report by both union and management be suspended," the telegram concluded.

The IWA negotiating committee announced Thursday it will recommend rejection of the Nemetz settlement proposals when union members vote on them early in September.

Negotiators, including Victoria local president Murray Drew, met in Vancouver this morning apparently to discuss the labor minister's offer, but could not be contacted.

FIR president John Billings said he had nothing further to add to the earlier feeling of "disappointment" over the cost impact of the wage proposals.

Mr. Justice Nathan Nemetz, who headed a two-week inquiry into the industry, recommended a pay increase of 60 cents an hour over two years and an additional 30 cents for tradesmen, with further increases for other skills.

OBJECTIONS

Among IWA objections to the proposals are failure of the judge to recommend a health and welfare plan, fully-paid by the employers and administered by the union and inclusion of sub-contracted work under the master agreement.

The union said there was not enough improvement in other fringe areas to warrant acceptance. For example, the report did not offer free room and board for camp workers.

At least one IWA spokesman took exception Thursday to statements by Premier Bennett and Peterson who both said union members should accept the Nemetz recommendations.

Canadian Planes Collide in Flight

BAGOTVILLE, Que. (CP) — Two Canadian Forces CF-5 aircraft from 433 tactical combat squadron here collided in mid-air today about 65 miles north of Bagotville.

Capt. Maurice Roy, Canadian Forces spokesman at the base, said it had not yet been determined what happened to the pilots. He did not give their names.

Capt. Roy said a search for wreckage and survivors is under way but no other details were immediately available.

The accident occurred about 10:30 a.m.

Storm Cleanup Under Way In Ontario

Times News Services

SUDBURY — The huge task of assessing damage and clearing debris began in earnest in this section of Ontario today, following Thursday's storm which killed four persons and injured 150.

Officials of the four communities most seriously affected toured the area today to inspect damages, which will total millions of dollars.

The storm, packing torrential rain and winds of up to 90 miles an hour, smashed through the mining communities of Lively and Copper Cliff, into the southern edge of Sudbury and on to the logging community of Field 45 miles to the east.

The storm had the effect of a hurricane, leaving buildings in ruins, uprooting trees, and sections of concrete sidewalk, smashing windows and vehicles and cutting power and telephone lines.

A spokesman for Ontario Hydro said the utility lost more than $1,000,000 in equipment damage in the Sudbury district alone.

★ ★ ★

Bell Canada said 85 poles, 15,000 feet of cable and 1.000 drop wires connecting houses to cables will have to be replaced.

Listed as dead by police and Red Cross officials were:

Paul Reback, 67, a gardener with the Copper Cliff parks commission, struck by debris while working on a tractor in a park;

Vincent Howard, 52, of Sudbury, pinned under a half-ton truck in which he was a passenger, when the vehicle was toppled by the wind on Highway 17;

Mrs. Cordelia Quenneville, 58, of Field, killed when the wind picked up her 35-foot house trailer, hurled it 200 feet against a deserted barn and pushed it 500 feet further on;

Pasquale Rocca, 57, of Toronto, an employee of Norco Construction who had been doing repairs at a house in Lively and took shelter in a garage when the storm hit. The wind hurled a camp trailer through the garage roof, pinning him to the floor.

★ ★ ★

Six children used a door as a stretcher and carried their injured mother one mile over fallen trees and tangled hydro wires to a truck that took her to hospital in North Bay.

Mrs. Joseph Lefebvre was trapped under the walls of her home when it was demolished by the storm.

The mayors of Sudbury and Lively described their communities as disaster areas and called on army trainees, miners, boy scouts and volunteers to aid police, firemen and members of the Emergency Measures Organization to aid in relief work.

Police and hosptial spokesmen said about 50 persons had been admitted to hospitals in the Sudbury area. Another 100 had been treated and released.

The Red Cross estimated that about 350 persons had been left homeless in the Sudbury and Lively areas, where 86 houses were destroyed and more than 100 heavily damaged. Some of the Sudbury homes were in the $50,000 range.

MORTARS FIRED ACROSS RIVER

N. Viets Sight Phnom Penh

PHNOM PENH (AP) — Viet Cong and North Vietnamese forces within sight of Phnom Penh slammed mortars into Cambodian defence lines across the Mekong River from the royal palace, a military spokesman reported today. But hard fighting reported Thursday within six miles of the capital eased off.

Heavy losses were reported on both sides. The spokesman said it least 19 Cambodian troops were killed and 124 wounded. He claimed 500 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong were killed, a claim that foreign observers generally viewed with skepticism.

The spokesman said while some Communist troops fired a few mortars into government positions directly across the mile-wide river from the royal palace, the bulk of the Communist force was about six miles northeast of the capital.

The Cambodian forces retreated about two miles southward to Prek Kraboa from Prek Tameak late Thursday after Prek Tameak was overrun. The Cambodian spokesman said the withdrawal was a tactical move to permit bombers to hammer the Communists.

Only small ground skirmishes were reported in South Vietnam, and the U.S. command began reducing its B-52 raids. The Pentagon announced Thursday that B-52 missions would be limited to an average of 1,000 sorties a month, a sortie being one flight by one bomber. The average rate recently has been 1,400 a month, informed sources said.

Qualified sources said all B-52 raids in the future would be flown from U-Tapao Air Base in Thailand. The B-52s that have been flying from Guam and Okinawa will be held in reserve.

Posties Escalate Campaign With Hit-and-Run Strikes

Times News Services

Canada's crippled mail service has almost come to a halt today with a major escalation of the postal union's hit-and-run strike campaign.

Victoria and most of British Columbia were without mail movement for the second straight day, but indications were that the walkout will end Saturday.

The new wave of rotating strikes reached its highest point in weeks as office after office across the land were struck — or in some cases closed down because insuficient mail was on hand.

TO SIT DOWN

Negotiations resume Saturday between the 27,000-member Council of Postal Unions and the federal government. They will sit down with Thomas O'Connor, a Toronto labor relations specialist.

O'Connor met council and government representatives together for about two hours Thursday before both sides went to separate rooms for further preliminary discussions.

O'Connor strolled through the restaurant and lobby of a downtown hotel where the talks are being held in shirtsleeves, available for meetings with either group.

He told reporters there were hopeful signs in the first few hours of discussion but it was too soon to make predictions.

The issues involved are not new ones, said O'Connor, a veteran of many labor disputes. "But the political aspects of the dispute are new."

O'Connor, the dispute's second mediator, returned to Toronto today on business but expected to return well before the 10 a.m. EDT starting time for Saturday's discussions.

QUIT IN JUNE

A. W. R. Carrothers, the first mediator, quit after four days of meeting with both sides in June. Carrothers, president of the University of Calgary, said no progress was being made at the time.

O'Connor said he is hopeful some agreement will be

SOMETHING TO HIDE?

Egypt Raps Spying

Times News Services

Egypt rejected today American surveillance of the Middle East ceasefire by satellite and U-2 spy plane, calling the plan a "pretext for espionage." Political circles in Israel said this showed Cairo had "Something to hide."

Such reconnaissance, "even if undertaken over Israeli-held territories, could provide Israel with additional advantages in the present delicate circumstances," said Cairo's semi-official newspaper Al Ahram.

The Egyptian statement came as a surprise. When the United States announced earlier in the week that it was undertaking reconnaissance and had informed Egypt, it was generally understood that it was being done with Cairo's consent.

Al Ahram said Egypt's stand had been known all along. It added that the United States "must adopt a neutral stand regarding this 'issue' if it is interested in seeing peace in the Middle East."

Al Ahram said Egypt also had turned down an American suggestion for Soviet high-level reconnaissance. But both the U.S. suggestion and the Egyptian rejcetion were formalities because the Soviet Union already has large numbers of military personnel on duty with Egypt's air and missile forces, and needs no high-flying planes or spaceships to keep it abreast of developments.

Th' ironical part of it is thet if all th' union negotiators got all they demand, there wouldn't be any jobs left in th' country fer anybody but negotiators.

Vehicles Set Afire as Indian Violence Continues

By INDER MALHOTRA
The Manchester Guardian

CALCUTTA — The tempo of violence here rose to a fierce pitch Thursday as two trams, five state buses, a police van and a fire engine were burned by rampaging mobs.

The rampage was a continuation of violence which broke out in the same part of the city Wednesday, sparked by the death in a Calcutta jail of a young man said to be a member of the pro-Moscow Communist Party faction. Mobs which surrounded the jail alleged that the youth had been beaten to death.

Worse trouble erupted at Durgapur, West Bengal's biggest industrial complex, scene of a face-to-face confrontation between the Marxist Communist Party and authorities, which had been relatively peaceful all week. After some cases of arson and violence, authorities imposed a curfew. The trouble at the industrial complex probably sprang from Marxist frustration over the light response to their call for an indefinite strike against all employers.

An important reason for the Marxist failure here is that their strike has nothing to do with trade union demands. It was called to demand withdrawal of the police and industrial security men, who have taken over watchmen's duties at the state-owned steel plant, as well as the release of some union leaders, including one prominent Marxist, arrested for complicity in four politically motivated murders at the industrial complex early this month.

The Marxists threaten to spread strikes and paralyze normal life all over West Bengal. All state government employees have been asked to strike for three days starting Aug. 26, although the government has warned them of dire consequences.

But despite the Durgapur strike call's general failure, increased strike activity in West Bengal may be expected during the next eight weeks because this period precedes Bengal's most important festival, Pujas. Employers always squabble with workers around this time over how large the holiday bonus payment will be.

. . . PETERSON

Duncan IWA president Weldon Jubenville said:

"If they (Bennett and Peterson) are really interested in industrial peace I suggest they keep their snouts right out of it."

Bennett said in Kelowna:

"As premier of the province I am asking the negotiating committee to reconsider and recommend acceptance."

Peterson said Thursday he found it hard to understand why the union leaders recommended rejection of the report.

"I think it should be remembered that the IWA was the party that suggested in the first instance that Mr. Justice Nemetz undertake this task," he said.

"We have acceded to their request, selected the man they wanted, and if they are thinking of using this report as a stepping-stone for greater awards, they are barking up the wrong tree."

Commenting on the telegram at noon today, Peterson revealed he spoke with Moore Thursday night and early today.

The labor minister appeared to feel Moore and the IWA negotiating committee will not oppose his involvement in the dispute despite a statement Thursday by Duncan IWA president Weldon Jubenville that Peterson and Premier Bennett should "keep their snouts right out" of the dispute.

'People—Not Industry' Major Pollution Threat

VANCOUVER (CP) — Individuals pose a greater threat to the environment than industrial operations, the former head of the B.C. pollution control branch said Thursday.

Charles J. Keenan said the public has been conditioned by press reports to believe that "we face an environmental disaster" caused by industry.

"This is just not true and all of the evidence available points to local areas of stress, almost exclusively associated with people and their centres of population," he said.

"In short, masses of people and their individual activities appear to be the source of greatest concern.

"The private automobile and the home furnace place more stress on the assimilative faculties of the atmosphere, as a whole, than do our industrial plants."

Mr. Keenan, now a private consultant, made the comments to the inquiry into pollution by the B.C. forest industry.

EIGHTH DAY

The inquiry, being conducted by W. N. Venables, present director of the pollution control branch, goes into its eighth day of hearings today.

Mr. Keenan criticized the negative attitude held by some groups toward the Pollution Control Act which he said provided an "excellent format for controlling pollution." He said he had helped prepare the act before it was passed into law by the provincial legislature in 1967.

Mr. Keenan said the forest industry should be allowed to discharge wastes into water and air only to the extent that these wastes could be absorbed by the environment.

He suggested it would be "unequitable and unreasonable" to expect mills in various geographical areas of the province to meet the same pollution control standards.

SPENDING PLANNED

G. S. Bowell, president of Rayonier Canada (B.C.) Ltd., told the inquiry his company plans to spend nearly $12 million on a water pollution abatement program at its Port Alice Pulp mill in the next eight years.

He said that water quality in Neroutsos Inlet "is admittedly degraded" by the discharge of all water effluents directly into the water from the plant.

The pollution program must take into account the mill's production obligations, revenue produced by the mill, the employment needs of the workers, and future social and aesthetic demands of the area, said Mr. Bowell.

He said the mill has been in operation since 1917 and is not impairing any recreational use with the effluent it was dispersing.

Dr. Bruce Fraser, spokesman for the Nelson chapter of the Kootenay Pollution Control Association, called on the government to recognize citizens' anti-pollution groups.

"Such recognition should be given so that the groups "might be effectively used to monitor the forest industry," he said.

CITIZEN VOICE

Mr. Fraser, a biological sciences professor at Selkirk College, told the inquiry some standard procedures should be worked out that would allow private citizens to report effectively to the pollution control board.

Colin Palmer, vice-chairman of the Powell River Anti-Pollution Association, told the inquiry he had affidavit evidence that a resident of the town had become sick on one occasion because of the odor from the MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. pulp mill.

Dr. J. H. Smith, director of the provincial government's division of occupational health, asked him whether the fact that one person becoming sick from the odor proved anything.

"I realize one person isn't a good test, but I am endeavoring to get more," he told Mr. Smith, a member of the inquiry's seven-man advisory panel.

Airline 'Sorry' For Flight Delay

CP Air apologized today for an overnight delay in a charter flight from England to Victoria earlier this week.

A spokesman for the company in Vancouver also said CP Air will investigate to see "this does not recur, in terms of the handling."

A series of delays and complications resulted in a number of the 250 passengers, most of them from Victoria and Vancouver Island, spending the night in Gatwick Airport. Several passengers have said they will complain to CP Air.

The company spokesman said the delay was caused by illness of a crew member and the required time before he could be replaced.

The accommodation problem was aggravated because another flight was delayed before CP Air's "and saturated accommodation in the Gatwick area," he said.

"I gather the situation was not as well handled as it might have been and for this we apologize."

He said Gatwick is not part of CP Air's regular schedule and the company relies on employees of other airlines "and the indications are this was not as well handled as we and the passengers would like it to be. In that respect, I guess all we can do is apologize. We have the greatest sympathy with their annoyance."

He said it was "an unusual combination of circumstances" which had not happened before.

reached — at least on monmonetary matters — over the weekend.

The postal workers have been staging rotating strikes for the last three months to support their demands, with the government retaliating by closing down regional offices in some areas affected by the strikes.

LOCAL PICTURE

Local post office and postal union officials today confirmed the current rotating strike will end Saturday morning when inside workers resume sorting operations.

Public service supervisor Leon Hall said there will probably be a rural mail delivery Saturday, with letter carriers to resume deliveries Monday.

"The situation is the same as it was yesterday," Hall said, "except Prince George has been suspended."

"Nobody seems to have any idea whether they'll be going back to work tomorrow, but we expect they will."

Marcel Boutin, Victoria branch president of the Letter Carriers Union said the phrase "indefinite time" which had been used to describe the current strike very likely did not apply to Greater Victoria postal outlets.

"That's how they phrased it from Vancouver but it looks as if the inside workers will go back tomorrow morning."

Vancouver strike headquarters was still awaiting word from Ottawa as to the duration of the strikes throughout the rest of the province.

The latest B.C. strikes started at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday in Vancouver and by Thursday morning had spread to all but 11 postal outlets in the province.

Today marks the fifth day Victoria's main post office has been closed since the rotating strike tactic began to be used by the Council of Postal Unions.

The main office has also been closed twice through suspensions of service which the government says are necessary because of lack of mail.

Foreign Money At $46 Million

OTTAWA (CP) — Foreign investment in Canada at the end of 1969 was estimated at $46,000 million in preliminary figures for the year released today by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

This included $41,000 million in long-term foreign investment, showing an increase of about $3,500 million in long-term capital and re-invested earnings. Other shorter-term investments by non-residents brought the total of Canada's external liabilities to $46,000 million, the bureau said.

Offsetting the foreign investment was a flow of Canadian long-term investment abroad along with accrued earnings and other claims by Canadians on non-residents, which together totalled $18,000 million.

The figures for 1969 released by the bureau were described as preliminary estimates.

At the end of 1967, Canada's net indebtedness was $25,200 million, with gross foreign investment in Canada of $40,200 million and Canadian holdings abroad of $15,000 million.

The figures on long-term capital investment are given at their book value, which in many cases far underestimates their current value.

Police Court

A man charged with dangerous driving who told court he had never driven before was sentenced to two months in jail Thursday by Judge William Ostler.

Billy Arthur, 31, of 524 Constance was driver of a car during an incident early Thursday morning in which a female passenger suffered a miscarriage.

Ostler described the crime as "the most heinous" dangerous driving case he had ever judged. He said it was "simply miraculous" nobody else was hurt.

Arthur drove a car which knocked over a stop sign and a telephone pole before it disappeared down the road.

He was also banned from driving for one year.

★ ★ ★

The judge showed more sympathy to Douglas Brown, currently serving time, when he found out Brown, charged with false pretences, obtained $50 in toys for his children Christmas Eve.

"Are you resolved to put all this behind you and rejoin your family," Ostler asked.

Brown replied that his wife had said he must straighten out in order to return home.

"Well you wouldn't blame her, would you?" Ostler said. "It's pretty hard to be left with a family to look after with a husband in jail all this time."

He sentenced Brown to four months in jail, to be served concurrent to a present sentence.

Ostler originally ordered a six-month sentence, but shortened it when he discovered that Brown would get out of jail earlier for good behavior.

Thomas Price, 20, of Bremerton, Wash. told court he never intended to bring marijuana into Canada but mechanical trouble forced him to bring his 35-foot sailboat into Victoria.

He was arrested Aug. 20 when 4½ ounces of marijuana were found aboard the vessel is the Inner Harbor.

"I use the marijuana as a relaxer before I go to sleep," he told Ostler.

"We'd have been sailing about 150 miles off shore. I didn't even want to land in Canada."

"It's an offence in both countries, isn't it?" Ostler asked.

He fined Price $400.

Thomas Lamb, 30, of 832 Esquimalt Road, was sentenced to one day in jail and fined $100 for possessing stolen property worth more than $50.

He was given stolen eight-track stereo tapes as a wedding present, court was told at an earlier session.

Canadian Exports Up 17 Per Cent

OTTAWA (CP)—Canadian exports rose 16.7 per cent to $8.58 billion in the first seven months of 1970 compared with the same period in 1969, Dominion Burea of Statistics said today.

Exports to the European Economic Community were up 44 per cent at $675 million, to the United Kingdom 36.2 per cent at $902 million, and to Japan 28.9 per cent at $478 million.

Exports to the United States were up 8.8 per cent at $6.49 billion.

July figures alone, compared with the same month in 1969, showed a rise of 82.8 per cent in exports to the United Kingdom, 79.7 per cent to the European Economic Community, 30.6 per cent to Japan and nine per cent to the United States.

The July total of $1.48 billion was 21.5 per cent above the $1.22 billion of July, 1969.

DBS said a $262 million increase was partly accounted for by increased shipments of nickel ores and aircraft to Britain and the EEC. Anticipation of a dock strike in Britain in late July also may have led to accelerated shipments to the country, the bureau said.

Larger exports of iron ores, crude petroleum, natural gas and nickel alloys helped account for the increase in exports to the U.S. Wheat shipments to Russia were about $20 million higher than in July, 1969.

B.C. Gazette Boosts Rates

Cost of placing official notices of fewer than 100 words will rise by 30 per cent from $5 to $6.50 and longer notices will increase in cost by a smaller percentage varying with length.

EMPRESS TO HOLD WHOOP-UP

The Empress Hotel will sponsor two days of public entertainment at the Causeway, Friday and Saturday, Sept. 4 and 5.

Activities will include street dances at 8 p.m. on both nights and singalongs and concerts Saturday afternoon from 3 to 6 p.m.

The hotel had sought a $200 grant from Victoria council to help with expenses for the event. But the request was refused at a meeting of council's finance committee Thursday.

Ald. Ove Witt said the money should come from the Victoria Visitors Bureau, or the Chamber of Commerce.

THE WEATHER

More sunny, warm weather is predicted for Saturday.

The weather office at Victoria International Airport says temperatures will be in the low to mid 70s and in the mid 60s near the water.

Winds will be west 15 over the Juan de Fuca Strait.

Adults Offered 100 Night Courses

Saanich school board will offer more than 100 courses in its adult education program which gets under way during the fall.

A brochure describing the courses has been mailed to Peninsula residents. Additional copies are available from the board office in Sidney or from public libraries in Brentwood, Saanich and Sidney.

The courses cost $1 a night and are open to secondary students 15 and over. Pensioners may enrol at half-price.

Adult education director Frank Baxter said the courses are designed for adults "in an attempt to meet community needs."

New courses to be offered this year include: retail control systems, mathematics in business, identifying household antiques, yoga, cartooning, Christmas decorations, cooking cabaret, graphics, small gasoline engines, hairstyling and hairpiece care, and uninvited guests (all about household pests).

Subject areas in which courses will again be offered are: foreign languages, commercial subjects, educational improvement, recreation and fitness, painting and pottery, cooking and sewing, hobbies and crafts, construction and machines, and commercial subjects.

Canada Manpower has agreed to sponsor eligible students in commercial courses which upgrade skills, and vocational counsellors will staff two free short courses designed to help adults seeking employment.

Courses will begin during the week of Sept. 14.

TWO YEARS AFTER INVASION

Czech Turbulence A Matter of History

Peter Rehak, a Czech-born Canadian citizen, was Associated Press correspondent in Prague the night of Aug. 20, 1968, when Soviet troops invaded Czechoslovakia. He gave the outside world its first word of the invasion. In the following story he analyses the change in Eastern Europe in the last two years.

HUSAK

Analysis

By PETER REHAK

BONN (AP) — The Soviet government entertained Czechoslovakia's Communist party chief, Gustav Husak, in Moscow today as an honored guest just two years to the day after Russian troops brought his predecessor to the Soviet capital under arrest.

The presence of Husak, the successor to Alexander Dubcek, at a Communist summit meeting is a graphic illustration of the political changes in Central Europe since the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia Aug. 20, 1968, shocked the Western world.

The key to the shift has been Chancellor Willy Brandt's coming to power in West Germany. For the Moscow summit was called to discuss a treaty the Russians signed last week with West Germany—the same country the Russians accused of helping Dubcek to undermine the Communist system in Czechovlovakia.

Brandt, a socialist with impeccable anti-Nazi credentials, has been accepted by the Russians as a negotiating partner. For his part, he has shown a willingness—despite domestic opposition—to give up Bonn's inflexible positions on the territory Germany lost in the Second World War.

The result has been the Soviet-German treaty, which is expected to improve Bonn's ties not only with the Soviet Union but also with the Communist countries of Eastern Europe, including Czechoslovakia.

TALKS IMMINENT

Husak's regime already has sent out feelers to Bonn. West German officials say talks probably will start within the next few months. The two countries do not have diplomatic relations, and the talks might eventually lead to an exchange of ambassadors.

Any Prague-Bonn agreement will be strictly within the limits set by Moscow, probably at Thursday's summit conference, and will not include such items as joint-venture enterprises, which were suggested in the Dubcek era.

Despite this, better relations with Bonn would benefit the Czechoslovaks and might make the burden of the Soviet occupation more bearable.

There would be economic advantages, and any agreement backed by the Russians would strengthen Husak's position at home. He is still fighting off the neo-Stalinists within his party who would like to see Dubcek and his associates put on trial and a return to the terror of the 1950s.

Economic and technological exchanges with West Germany would undo some of the damage done when more than 40,000 persons, many of them skilled technicians and professional workers, fled the country following the Soviet invasion.

With the bogeyman image removed from West Germany, Husak has a chance of accomplishing at least part of what Dubcek set out to do—to bring into his country modern technology from the West.

Protest Fizzles, Business Normal

PRAGUE (Reuters) — A planned boycott of stores died aborning today as Czechoslovaks largely ignored the second anniversary of the 1968 Warsaw pact invasion of their country.

Many stores that were nearly empty this morning, apparently in response to a clandestine appeal for a protest boycott, filled up as the day wore on. Sales clerks said business was normal.

At noon, a likely time for a protest, Wenceslas Square in the centre of the city was humming with its usual activity. Last year at noon, car horns were blown and traffic stopped to protest against restrictions of the country's freedom.

Communist party officials will undoubtedly hail the absence of even passive protest today as a triumph for their policy of "normalization"—removing reformers from public life and ensuring political conformity under strict Communist control.

The only known incidents in Prague involved three East Germans and two Italians, who were questioned by police today as they tried to pay a tribute at the grave of Jan Palach, the student who burned himself to death in a protest suicide in January, 1969.

The East Germans, one of whom is a priest, also were stopped by police Thursday night as they tried to put flowers in front of the statue of King Wenceslas in Wenceslas Square. They said they had come to Czechoslovakia specially to mark the anniversary.

Czechoslovaks appeared to be buying fewer newspapers than usual, in keeping with part of the clandestine appeal for a boycott of stores, movie houses, theatres and newspapers. But movie theatre box offices were doing a normal amount of business, and downtown restaurants were full, or almost so, during the lunch hour.

Police continued to patrol the streets but were clearly breathing easier after the noon hour had passed.

Freighter, Ferry Making 11 Knots

VANCOUVER (CP) — The navigating officer of the Russian freighter Sergey Yesenin testified Thursday the ship altered its course 10 degrees to starboard and then 20 degrees to starboard three minutes before the collision with a British Columbia ferry Aug. 2.

N. N. Burnos, speaking through an interpreter, told a federal inquiry into the collision, which killed three ferry passengers, that the order to alter the freighter's course was given by the Canadian pilot in English, then translated into Russian by the ship's captain and relayed to the helmsman.

Asked if there were any other helm orders, he said:

"I didn't hear any."

Burnos, second mate on the freighter, said he did not see the approaching ferry Queen of Victoria on the ship's radar screen until the collision was imminent.

He testified he was standing watch constantly on the radar, but the only echoes he saw on the screen were those of some small fishing vessels.

He said he did not see the ferry until it was immediately ahead and added that the speed of both vessels was "not more than 11 knots."

Burnos said a short whistle blast was sounded as the Russian ship started to turn to starboard before rounding Helen Point in Active Pass, scene of the crash.

"What did you do after the collision?" asked commission counsel Guy Major.

"I marked the point on the chart and ran to the mustering point for the damage control party," he said.

"The chief officer gave the emergency signal, the ship's alarm was given, and it was announced throughout the ship where the demolition party was to gather."

Burnos said the time of the collision was 12:07 p.m., seven minutes after he took over on the radar.

The inquiry was told he had six years experience at sea, had been in B.C. waters three times prior to the crash, but that he had never sailed through Active Pass.

Principle and Practice

THE PUBLIC'S CYNICAL RECEPTION of the announcement that highway widening along the Elk Lake shoreline will not encroach on the lake, will involve only a narrow strip and will destroy only three or four trees, is hardly to be wondered at. Modern experience shows that when natural attractions are in conflict with mechanical "progress," the latter almost invariably wins.

The no man's land that has been created at Royal Oak and for half a mile around it — all for the purpose of enabling one road to pass over another — gives no encouragement to believe that Elk Lake will be held sacrosanct if "improvements" demand its violation. There will be an outcry; there will be official and unofficial assurances that no real harm will be done, that the benefits will exceed the losses; the outcries will subside — and the job will go ahead.

The problem is that preservation of natural beauty and scenic attractions has not yet been accepted by governments at all levels as a basic principle which has to be observed. It is given attention as a guideline to be followed only after other considerations have been satisfied, and in some cases, obviously, they cannot be neglected. But in many others they can, and there have been numerous incidents in which threats to natural beauty have been eased or eliminated when public pressure forced a second look by the experts.

"It will cost more" is not necessarily a valid argument in rejecting a plea to save trees or a view or some other natural amenity, for the natural asset whose preservation is sought in human terms may be far more valuable than the man-made innovation proposed. The real cost of parkland confiscated for a power line or a building is seldom fully computed; a proper assessment of the "bargains" we get under such circumstances could be very revealing.

In the less than a century and a half that the white man has been active in this area, little that he has done has been a positive improvement on nature's original bequest. It is a humbling thought that much of what we do should be undone — and that in more enlightened times ahead it will be.

Coy Answers At Pollution Inquiry

THE PROVINCIAL INQUIRY into forest industry pollution now under way in Vancouver has produced some bizarre exchanges that can only make the public wonder just how much the provincial government is really interested in cleaning up pollution. In presenting a brief to the inquiry from the International Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers, union Vice-President Pat O'Neal said the government would not give the union any information about disposal permits granted to pulp mills, terming it confidential.

Withholding such information, which is unquestionably in the public interest, since it affects the air we breathe and the water we use, is reprehensible. The fact that the government is secretive about the terms of its mill disposal permits only raises suspicions about what the government allows to be dumped into British Columbia waters. And considering that no charges have been laid under the provincial pollution control act since its inception almost three years ago, the government's credibility comes into question where clean air and water are concerned.

That the provincial inquiry into forest industry pollution may turn out to be an exercise in futility can be shown by Chairman W. N. Venable's exasperated remarks to forest industry representatives. At one point Mr. Venables said, "There is a dearth of factual material being presented at this inquiry." Agreeing to accept written answers Mr. Venables warned, it would "defeat the purpose of a public inquiry." At other times the inquiry chairman termed some answers "evasive" and said he was close to classing one expert as a "hostile" witness.

This type of behavior by the Council of Forest Industries, and the provincial government's refusal to reveal information concerning mill disposal permits, is difficult to understand. Every segment of the community has an interest in cleaning up a threat that may some day choke us. If the government and the forest industry continue to display such coy attitudes and answers to serious questions about their operations the ultimate cost of curing pollution may be measured in livelihoods rather than dollars.

A Boost for Low Income Housing

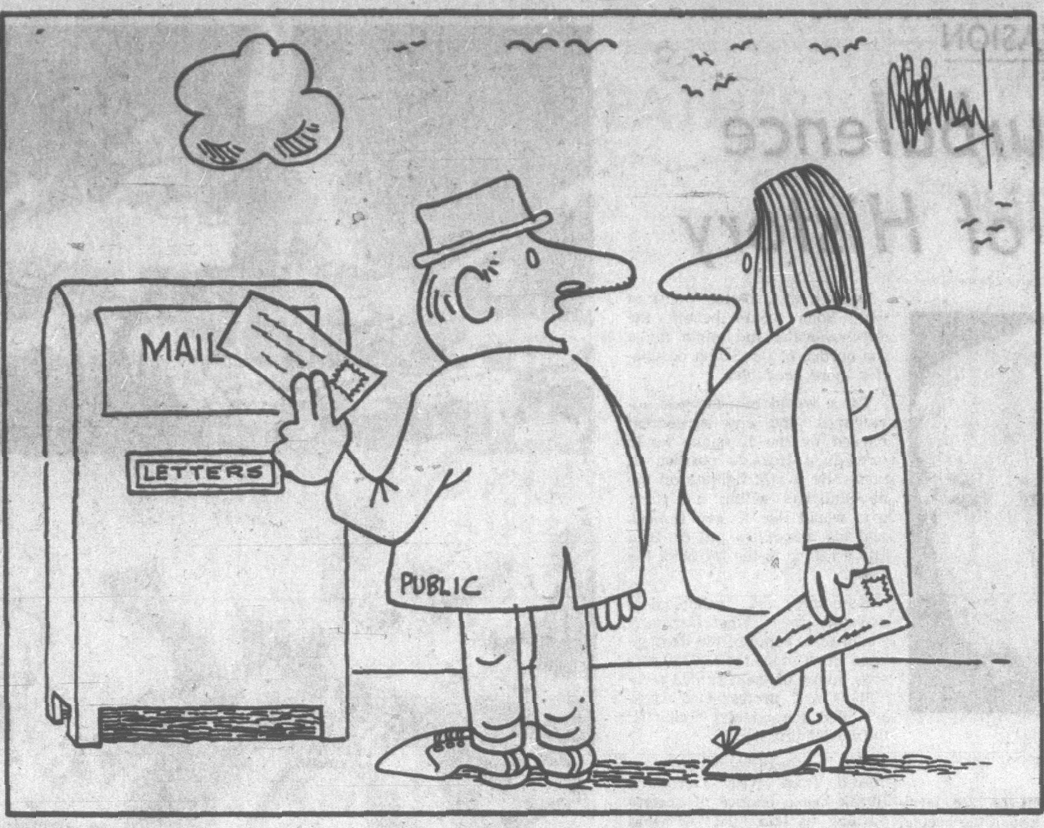
THE BATTLE AGAINST INFLATION has indirectly caused casualties in Canadian housing starts. In the Greater Victoria region alone there was a 43 per cent drop in new apartment starts between January 1 and the end of June, 1970. Tight money coupled with high interest rates and the increasing cost of land, plus wage increases won by construction unions, add up to fewer new dwellings. Recalling the Economic Council of Canada's warning that only a sustained house-building program over the years could hope to supply Canadians with decent housing, the effects of inflation on housing looked even grimmer.

In these circumstances Robert Andras, minister without portfolio responsible for housing, announces that he will urge all approved lending agencies to make more funds available to the residential mortgage market. And the government will lead the way by making an extra $100 millions in public funds available for low-income housing this year, which is calculated to produce 15,000 additional low-income housing starts.

Thus out of a total lending budget, in all categories, of some $954 millions for the year, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will spend $670 millions on low-income and public housing. In terms of housing starts this will mean 50,000 new dwellings in the low-income category for this year alone, compared with a total of 82,000 over the past 21 years.

The priority for public housing is entirely as it should be. Both CMHC and the building industry have shown a preference in the past for catering to middle-class and luxury-class homes. But even with government incentives, total housing starts are expected to fall 40,000 short of last year's 220,000. If there are frowns from economists there will certainly be cheers from the estimated 17,000 additional construction workers who will build the new houses, not to mention thousands of Canadians who will leave their sub-standard dwellings behind.



"... Somehow I feel ridiculous ..."

FROM WASHINGTON

By JAMES RESTON

'A Flypaper for Well-Meaning Bores'

THE Nixon Administration has been around long enough now so that, if you don't mind getting in a fight, you can generalize about its personality. It is cautious, tidy, industrious, and monumentally dull. It is a flypaper for efficient, well-meaning bores. It is engaged in some of the most exciting conflicts in the history of the republic, but it has somehow managed to reduce them all to the level of a mathematical equation.

Reston

It has all the figures but very little poetry. It deals with "poverty," but never quite manages to convey a sense of pity about the poor. It deals with war, but emphasizes not the American dead and wounded but the "decline" in our casualties and the "body count" of the enemy. This is odd, because this is an administration of decent, honorable men, but it talks in graphs and trends and slogans, and somehow leaves out the human element and the dust and roar of life itself.

One of the interesting things about all this is that President Nixon obviously recognizes the human element in politics. He knows that the people like good news, peace, sports, and smiling faces. So he is optimistic, emphasizes peace, calls up poor Vince Lombardi of the Washington Redskins who is fighting for his life, and smiles constantly. But there is something calculated about all this and something mirthless about the frozen smiles.

Calculated Techniques

Still, these techniques are not entirely a deception. The president is working for peace, after his own political fashion he has always admired Vince Lombardi and — believe it or not — once talked about Lombardi as a possible Republican vice-presidential nominee. But there is something missing in the human approach of this administration which even members of the president's own cabinet and White House staff deplore.

What is missing, I think, is the capacity of the president and his associates to convey to the people or even to themselves a deep feeling of conviction. The president has three fundamental problems: (1) how to withdraw from Vietnam and reduce American commitments abroad without sliding into isolation; (2) how to brake inflation without stumbling into an economic depression; and (3) how to deal with the threat of anarchy and revolution at home without defying the tradition of civil liberties within the nation.

But the personality of the Nixon administration is not quite in tune with these problems, all of which are so difficult that they cannot be proved but have to rely upon goodwill and faith. The Nixon men think of themselves, quite seriously, as moral individuals, working for good and even noble ends, but their means are still the techniques of Tammany Hall and Madison Avenue.

No doubt this will work against a Democratic party which is divided, leaderless, and just as cynical as the politicians around the president. But it still does not deal with the president's main problems.

He is still in trouble. There is something very good and important at the bottom of this Republican well, but the administration is relying on its techniques rather than on its principles. It is not confident enough to state its plain intention, to define its war aims and its policies and priorities on the home front.

It has a good political defence. It is good at getting out of awkward situations, and events overseas are going toward peace in Vietnam and the Middle East, and arms control in Vienna.

Still, the Nixon administration has not established that sense of trust or affection necessary to carry the country through the terrible ambiguous issues that often have to be taken on the personal word of the president.

It is trying to be both moral and slick at the same time. It is good at fuzzing up issues and it obviously has the Democrats off balance. But it is still an ambiguous administration. It has not even given its own cabinet or the civil service in Washington a sure sense of where it is going. It believes in keeping everybody off balance — and in that, unfortunately, it is succeeding.

Cleaning Up Cleansers

By MAURICE WESTERN, from Ottawa

IN these days, when economists meet only for the purpose of prognosticating woe, humbler citizens may draw consolation from the saga of the detergent industry. Only a few short months ago morale in the industry was at low ebb — across a once bright future as perceived by leading executives had fallen the long shadow of Joe Greene, minister of energy, mines and natural resources. Mr. Greene in response to the urgings of the pollution probers and on the advice of International Joint Commission's scientists had turned thumbs down on phosphates and proposed their early elimination from household cleansers in accordance with a prescribed schedule.

Western

The problem, according to the industry and its advisers, was that, in spite of intensive research on an international scale, no alternative to phosphates was in sight or even early prospect. Before the companies was a turn in the road and beyond that, ruin. Even the cash register, however, was of secondary importance in comparison with the probable fate of the housewife and the grave implications of Mr. Greene's well intentioned but catastrophic policy for the health of the nation.

Much testimony could be quoted. It may suffice for the sake of brevity to recall the warning of the committee for water quality of the Canadian detergent industry. According to a winter release: "If action banning phosphates were implemented, housewives would be deprived of every laundry detergent brand which they have become accustomed to using to get their family's clothes clean. This step would be equivalent to setting back cleanliness standards more than 20 years. Housewives would find it virtually impossible to continue to enjoy the benefits of the modern automatic clothes washing machine."

Nor was this all. The high cleanliness demands of public health facilities and nursing homes would be seriously affected, as would be dairy and canning operations.

Hope-Destroying Verdict

Industrial scientists had pronounced their hope-destroying verdict: "At this point there does not appear to be any known single or combination of materials that can satisfactorily perform the many-faceted functions of phosphates in detergent formulations."

Mr. Greene, heedless of entreaties, imposed his schedule. A less resolute industry might have yielded at this point to utter despair. It is well known that a mere downturn on the market is enough to send brokers hurtling on to the pavements of Wall Street. The inspiring fact is that the detergent manufacturers rallied, and faith has once again produced miracles, as anyone can discover for himself from industry handouts and national advertising.

Here is a typical report from Clean Water News. X Company announced "that it is reducing the phosphate content 10-50 per cent in certain detergent products it manufactures. Jay Van Andel, chairman of the board, said that the availability of moderate amounts of a satisfactory phosphate substitute has enabled (X Company) to make the reduction."

More Encouraging

Even more encouraging is an advertisement of Y Company, which depicts no less than six of the old familiar reassuring brands with the note that "All . . . have been reformulated to give you great washday performances along with lower phosphate levels." According to the text the new formulas had to conform to government regulations while at the same time maintaining the high quality reputations of all (Y Company) brands. Every new formula was a complete success.

As it now turns out, what's good for the water, or what's left of it, is good for the detergent industry. This should encourage the new water boards to afford similar opportunities to other industries. Perhaps they too will pass their tests.

Looking Back

From the Times of August 21, 1910:

LONDON — The Army and Navy Chronicle says "Canada aims at training her own personnel. Mistakes will surely be made, but Canada is in earnest, and will ultimately build up a navy that will count," Lord Crewe replying to the suggestion that Canada train its own sailors said he did not think such a departure convenient, either for this, or for other countries.

Personal Analysis

As one of the Victoria physicians whose salary, as paid by the B.C. Medical Services Commission, was published by your newspaper this past week, I am writing to make a personal analysis of this $36,684 payment. To have to do this is most distasteful to me, nevertheless, I feel that it is absolutely essential that your readers hear from someone who is providing a medical service in this community.

I am a family physician, 43-years of age, married with two teen-age children. I graduated from U.B.C. in Pharmacy in 1950 and in Medicine in 1955. I served for four years as a Medical Officer in the Canadian Armed Forces before returning to Victoria in 1960, to enter private practice. I work approximately sixty hours per week, seeing twenty-five to thirty patients per day in the office, and from ten to fifteen patients per day in the hospital, and two to five patients in their homes. For the past two years, I have limited my practice because I am physically unable to work harder and still practise what I would consider to be good medicine.

In 1969, I received $44,041.42 in professional fees ($36,684 from the B.C. Medical Services Commission). Of this amount, I paid out $18,365.53, which were the expenses necessary to run my office (this amount included $8,178.07 in staff salaries, $4,200 in rent, $1,179.01 for the telephone, $1,010.03 in dues and licences, and $3,779.42 in miscellaneous expenses). My income, after expenses, was $25,675.89. Personal exemptions and pension contributions (I provide my own pension), brought my total taxable income to $21,426.13. I paid $7,669.73 income tax on this amount, leaving a "take-home pay" of $13,756.40, or $4.75 per hour.

If your readers would compare the figure of $13,756.40 with the published B.C. Medical Services Commission figure of $36,684, and my actual income of $44,041.42, perhaps they will better understand what these gross payments to an individual physician mean. I am sure that my expenses as a family physician are no different than any other family physician practising in Victoria, and I am equally sure that some of my specialist colleagues have expenses that often run as high as 50 per cent of their income.

In conclusion, I would like to say that I consider the publication of doctors' salaries, both by the government, and in particular, by your newspaper, to be a gross invasion of privacy. I object most strongly to having the professional fees of our profession (or any other profession for that matter), made the subject of political debate as if we were members of a public utility. If there are physicians earning excessive amounts of money for the services they are providing, then they will be dealt with, as they always have, not by the newspapers, or by the "hot-line" programs, but by their own patients, who are very much aware of the quality of the care they are receiving, if not the cost of this care, and by the B.C. Medical Association, which has always maintained a careful watch over the patterns of quality of the medical practice in this province.—J. R. LeHuquet, B.S.P., M.D.

Children's Teeth

The fluoride issue is raising its head again, though admittedly in less serious form than suggesting it be put in our water supplies. But officialdom must know, or should know, that refined sugar and soft foods are among the biggest enemies of children's teeth. The authorities would be better occupied in campaigning against these, rather than getting on the easier, and more popular, fluoridation bandwagon. — H. H. Bridge, 3904 Shelbourne St.

"Big Bluff"

Judging by the action being taken in other provinces, British Columbia's highly touted labor legislation appears to be nothing less than a great big farce. When the labor bosses make loud noises, both Mr. Bennett and Mr. Peterson shake like falling leaves. The sad part of it all, insofar as the taxpayer is concerned, is that there are three people at the top who are paid an annual salary in excess of $40,000 each — to administer what. This works out to better than $100 per day, each and every day of the year.

Old age pensioners and welfare recipients, please take note. — "Non-Union Taxpayer"

Gulf Islands

I have written Mr. Curtis, chairman of the Capital Regional District: If the avowed aim of planning — as far as the Gulf Islands are concerned — is to preserve the character of this area, then I have news for you: This much-vaunted character has already been destroyed by the mere preliminaries of planning, for the latter have sown nothing but discord, and have set friend against friend. Or don't you realize that our previously harmonious human relationships were as much part of the character of the lands as their physical environment?

Besides showing dissent and creating an uneasy climate of misunderstanding, the proponents of planning have also given cause for serious doubt regarding their true — or should I say ulterior? — motives; I am, of course, referring to the mysterious yet ultimate goal of integrating the management of the American San Juan Islands with that of the Canadian Gulf Islands — as set out in the "Gulf Islands Study."

Therefore I am asking you, Mr. Curtis, what is behind this oblique goal? We want the truth!—W. Bangert, R.R. 1, Ganges.

Golf Equipment Industry Big Business in Canada

MONTREAL (CP) — The Canadian golf equipment industry has grown into a $9 million operation as greater numbers of people take to the fairways.

Chris Gribbin of the Royal Canadian Golf Association says there are "probably about 150,000 golfers" in the province of Quebec alone.

"The number of clubs rose to 59 in 1951 from 56 in 1939. Then between 1952 and 1960 we got 23 more member clubs. Since then clubs have joined at the rate of 10 a year for a total of 1970 of 184 clubs in Quebec."

Leading the industry in the manufacture of balls and running second in the making of clubs is Campbell Manufacturing Co., a wholly-owned subsidiary of Canadian Industries Ltd. of Montreal.

There are three other major manufacturers of equipment in Canada—Brunswick of Canada Ltd. of Mississauga, Ont.; Slazengers Canada Ltd. of Toronto; and A. G. Spalding and Bros. of Canada Ltd. of Brantford, Ont.

EXPORTS CLUBS

It exports to Britian, South Africa and Japan "and we also ship some to places such as Fiji and Zambia," said Les Moore, Campbell's export manager.

"But the big export market is in Japan. Exports account for about 10 per cent of our total production."

The Japanese present special problems for Campbell. First, the clubs must be shorter and secondly, the company must import quantities of persimmon wood from Tennessee to make the heads for drivers.

"The Japanese have a thing about persimmon," said Robert Hughes, Campbell's sales representative for western Quebec and eastern Ontario.

"Ever since the pros played over there, using persimmon heads, they won't buy anything else. Consequently, it costs about $600 for a set of clubs in Japan, including tariffs and transportation."

MAKES THREE LINES

Then there are other lines manufactured for retail outlets such as sports shops and larger chain stores. These vary in price from about $60 a set to as much as $200 or $300.

"A beginner won't want to shell out $400 for clubs, play a few rounds and then find out he's not all that big on golf. Retailers know this and they stock quite a variety of low and medium-priced clubs.

"At a club, however, it's a different thing. People who join a club are usually pretty serious golfers and, once they've mastered the basic skills of the game, they're ready to make a big equipment investment."

But this is not always so, said Mr. Hughes.

"I know of some cases where people will pay the initiation fee at a club, which in some instances runs as high as $7,000, put their $500 or $600 worth of equipment in the locker and never play a game."

Southam Business Acquires National

MONTREAL (CP) — Southam Business Publications Ltd., a subsidiary of Southam Press Ltd., has announced the acquisition of privately-owned National Business Publications of Gardenvale, Que.

Cost of the purchase and sales volume of National were not disclosed.

National has 14 monthly and annual publications including Monetary Times, Pulp and Paper Magazine of Canada and Canadian Industrial Equipment News.

PASSING the Thames test with flying color—bright orange—plastic body air cushion craft from Ottawa seems a hit in Britian, where hovercraft originated. Built by Canahover Ltd., the 16-foot sports version may also pack 600-pound freight load on water, 1,000 pounds on land, or carry one passenger when fitted with a second seat. It can make 50 m.p.h. and is adaptable to such commercial uses as crop spraying and survey work. Sir Christopher Cockerell invented the practical air cushion vehicle, resulting in the large commercial craft in use in Britain and other parts of the world including the Canadian north and B.C. coast. ### GIRL FRIDAYS

Some Fast Dames —A Case History

By Jack Scott

Today's contribution, in the nature of a tribute to the women who really run our affairs, began at a luncheon table in Victoria's Union Club.

By a series of coincidences too bizarre for you to believe, I found myself there with no less than six of our town's leading executives, each of them with his hair down (those, that is, with hair), confessing that chaos would result if the Girl Fridays of today were to desert their posts.

"The one indispensable factor in business today," said one, "is the private secretary."

The unanimous murmur of approval would have brought the roses to the cheeks of every little lady who works in the outer office.

Scott

The net effect was to send me poste haste to the reference shelves and the Chamber of Commerce archives, a research project that took me all the way back to Rose Fritz. That was in the year 1905 when typing speed alone was the way to the bosses' flinty hearts. The girl who could go like the wind on her Pittsburgh Visible or Smith Silent Eight was the girl of the hour.

Rose was one of a bevy of virtuoso typists who rocketed up to and far beyond the magic, break-through mark of 130 words a minute, the four-minute mile of the flying typing machines.

The papers of the time were filled with the news of Rose's practice methods which favored the use of ponderous texts of higher mathematics and astronomy. She could rattle off a cool 100 polysyllabic words a minute purely in the interest, as a yellowed Victoria Times clipping tells me, "of keeping her fingers in the highest state of suppleness."

By the early 20s Stella Willins had replaced Rose as queen of the typists when she was clocked at no less than 264 words per minute. When she arrived in her cloche hat at one contest, elegant and poised in a motorcycle side-car, the police had to hold back the adoring crowds.

★ ★ ★

(Joyce Holden, who teaches English and shorthand at Sprott-Shaw here, tells me that Stella's 264 words per minute would be impossible under today's competitive conditions which call for a full hour of typing and a penalty of 10 words for every incorrect word. Under those rules the world record on a manual machine was set in 1923 by one Albert Tangora who managed 147 words a minute and, on an electric machine, in 1941, by Margaret Hamma who clipped along at 149 words a minute. Miss Hamma managed 210 words a minute in one "two-minute burst.")

Another early-day world champion was Margaret Owen whose patented methods became the Bible of every office girl. "Don't be a key clasher," Margaret advised, and, "The left thumb is an outcast, but the right thumb is monarch of the space bar." Stirring words, you'll agree.

The Owen practice lines, long since forgotten, were known to every stenographer (or "typewritist") of the day. For the second row of keys, for example, it was "Had Alaska a flag a lad asks Jak" and, for the third, "Try to write true or quit your poor typewriter" and, for a fast warm-up, "A quick movement of the enemy would jeopardize six gunboats."

Even then, it seems, the typewriter was seen as a great emancipator, a sentiment admirably expressed by one J. N. Kimball.

"The typewriter has blessed young womanhood as nothing in the line of invention ever blessed her before," he opined. "It cut the strings that bound her to unhealthy and ill-paying pursuits and placed within her grasp a profession eminently fitted to her peculiar make-up."

In subsequent, more sophisticated times the typewriter was almost forgotten in the formidable list of the ideal secretary's requirements.

They were noted by Sheila A. Ward, of Montreal, in her work called "A Secretary's Secrets," as discretion, loyalty, unerring tact, team spirit, good posture, immaculate grooming, pleasant voice, clear diction, an eye for detail, a "phenomenal" memory for dates and a "good" memory for names and faces.

She should compose clear, concise letters that sounded as if her boss wrote them, "lie honestly and decently," take criticism gracefully, be friendly and cheerful, impersonal and unprejudiced, extend courtesy to everyone, "coat bitter pills with feminine charm," be kind to the office boy and leave office parties early.

She was to be, as well, an expert mind reader and a good listener, get at least seven hours sleep a night and take adequate exercise ("once an hour when nobody is around, touch your toes 10 times.")

The ideal secretary, Miss Ward went on, would never watch the clock, gossip, look harassed, indulge in nervous tics (lip-biting, girdle-hitching, etc.) and never, never wear fire-engine red or passionate purple.

Obviously no man could answer these qualifications. The statistics tell the inevitable story. In 1891 there were 383 female and 468 male stenographers and typists in Canadian offices. Fifty years later the ratio was something like 78,000 females to fewer than 3500 males and by 1949 the Canadian Civil Service Stenographers' Manual had all but assumed that the male was gone forever.

Jobless Plan Protest March

Unemployed citizens groups in Victoria and Vancouver have called rallies for Aug. 26 to protest high unemployment and demand decent jobs or a guaranteed annual income.

Members of the Victoria Citizens' Committee on Unemployment and the Low Income Group will march from Bastion Square at 12:30 p.m. to the offices of the Provincial Alliance of Businessmen at 620 View and Canada Manpower, 1415 Vancouver.

The delegation will present briefs to officials of both agencies.

In Vancouver, the rally has been called by the Unemployed Citizens Welfare Improvement Council and the Action Committee for Unemployed Youth.

Hydro Yields and Brings Polecat Down

It was all a little bewildering this morning for five-months-old Misty, a very frightened white kitten, and two-year-old David Bouchard, her master.

Onlookers cheered as B.C. Hydro lineman Dunc Bissett handed Misty to David's babysitter Debbie Vanyo who passed the kitten over to the boy.

B.C. Hydro earlier refused to rescue her because of the dangerous high voltage wires attached to the pole.

Calls poured into local hotline shows protesting the decision.

Finally, Thursday night, Mayor Courtney Haddock put a call through to Hydro from his yacht along the east coast of Vancouver Island and the company agreed to kill the circuit and send a man up the pole.

●

Residents in an area north to Cedar Hill, south to Finlayson, east to Holloway and west to Falmouth were without electricity for 20 minutes during the rescue operation at 10 a.m.

David Beeching from the SPCA doesn't know what all the fuss was about.

"What people don't seem to realize is that cats can go a number of days without food and water. I've been down there every day since that cat's been up there and it was perfectly comfortable until today."

Beeching said he was "positive" that if left alone, Misty would have come down on her own.

The SPCA has come under sharp criticism.

"I phoned the B.C. Hydro about the cat earlier in the week but they flatly refused to rescue it," said Beeching.

'The Saanich electrical street lighting department took a look at the situation and said it was too dangerous to try and get at that cat with all those high voltage wires."

Mrs. Henry Eng, wife of the owner of a nearby grocery store said the $25 collected from employees to pay for Misty's rescue was refused by B.C. Hydro.

Topless Pair Fined After Stag Party

A man and two women were charged in provincial court this morning following a police raid on a stag party at a downtown club late Wednesday night.

Katheryn Marlene Barnes, 20, of a downtown hotel, and Sandra Carol Evans, 20, of 645 Dunedin, both pleaded guilty to separate charges of being inmates of a common bawdy house Aug. 20.

A man identified in court only as William Daniel Walker was remanded without plea on charges of keeping a common bawdy house and publishing obscene moving pictures.

The two women were each fined $50 by Judge William Ostler, and each was given a week to pay.

A 10-man police squad raided the Downunder Club at 1206 Wharf Street after plain-clothes officers had watched two topless dancers perform before an audience of 85 men.

The judge asked Miss Barnes how long she had been engaged in such "bizarre" conduct.

She asked Ostler exactly what he meant by bizarre conduct.

"It seems evident from the facts," he replied.

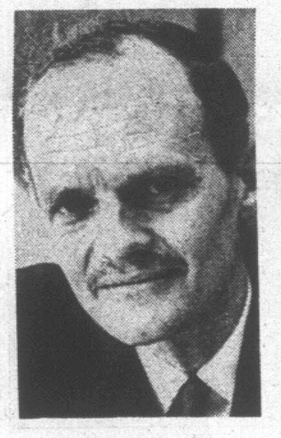
She told court she had been "a go-go dancer for about a month now."

Court was also told by a uniformed police officer that he had entered the premises in civilian clothes and that about 9:35 p.m. a man entered with movies and a screen.

The films showed "in my opinion, every type of sexual deviation" including a sexual act between two lesbians, the officer said.

Prosecutor John Macintyre, however, asked that the evidence relating to the movies be withdrawn at the time because it did not relate to the charges brought against the two women.

Inner Harbor of Parks Backed by Museum Head



FOSTER

The director of the Provincial Museum backed a city alderman Thursday in his struggle to save the Inner Harbor foreshore for parks and people.

Bristol Foster said he supports Ald. Peter Pollen who earlier this week criticized proposed high-rise development on the harbor's rim and said the first 100 feet from the waterfront should be reserved for parks with boulevards for people to enjoy.

Foster said it's obvious something has to happen to the Inner Harbor.

'PRETTY REPULSIVE'

The combination of water and land posed by the Inner Harbor is an intricate one to deal with, said Foster, a biologist who describes himself as an ecologist. Combined with the Gorge, there could be a long thin park development stretching across the heart of the city.

All the great cities of the world are marked by rich park development of this sort, the museum director said. He cited as examples the Bois de Boulogne of Paris and Cologne's extensive parks established by former mayor Conrad Adenauer decades ago as examples.

Every time another high-rise goes up, Victoria falls further behind in its ratio of parkland to people.

"It's all part of the negative or primitive outlook on the part of some members of city council," Foster said. "They've heard the word ecology but they really don't know what it means."

HANSEN RULED FIT FOR TRIAL

Carl Jens Hansen, 24, charged with rape and attempted murder, was ruled fit to stand trial this morning in provincial court following reading of a psychiatric report from a Riverview Mental Hospital doctor.

Rescue Centre To Move Here

Headquarters of the Canadian Forces Rescue Co-ordination Centre, which has organized thousands of sea rescues and mercy flights since it was founded in 1947, will be moved from Vancouver to HMC Dockyard, Esquimalt, on Sept. 1.

Responsible for search and rescue operations in the Pacific area, the centre is leaving Vancouver for Victoria as part of the consolidation program for Canadian Forces' bases which began in 1966.

Callers with information on air and marine troubles will still follow the same procedure of dialling O for the operator and asking for the centre.

Residents of the Greater Vancouver area will be able to contact the centre direct by dialling 732-4141.

A service spokesman said the move will provide an opportunity to update equipment, resulting in a more effective and reliable communications network during search and rescue operations.

Rescue aircraft will continue to be based at Comox.

Arthur Mayse . . .

ON MY WAY TO WORK this morning, I passed a patch of wasteland dominated by a long, mounded tangle of blackberry vines. Years ago, some gardener from a neighboring house must have dumped a basket of prunings there.

The result, in these mellow days of late summer, is free fruit for anybody who will spare the time and trouble to harvest it.

Since the green hillock with its nooks and bays covers a sizeable area, a number of pickers may have been busy there. But I saw only one — a middle-aged woman who plainly knew what she was about.

A fruit juice can hung from a string around her neck, leaving her hands free for a task well-suited to a sunny morning. She didn't attack the vines as novice pickers, do, and I'm comfortably sure no berry that showed even a fleck of red went into the can.

These are tame blackberries allowed to ramble wild. If you're a newcomer to this land of milk and honey and other good things, be assured that you'll find such berry bonanzas plentifully distributed. By determined prospecting, you may even find a tucked-away patch that few pickers know about.

Once in the years before a blackberry vine reached up to lace itself among overgrown laurels on our place, we found just such a trove. Without moving more than a dozen feet along its perimeter, we filled every container we'd brought along. Then we loaded my fishing hat.

But the blackberry we like best and sometimes find is the small, wonderfully-flavored wild one. It is at its finest where the loggers have felled, yarded, burned and passed on. Look for it where fireweed grows. It is a ground-hugger, its skinny, prickly vines sprawling among the stumps, with a leaf or two already reddening for autumm.

Alongside an old logging grade we often travelled, we once found a splendid wild blackberry swarm. Next time we followed that grade, we took two small cans of evaporated milk and a couple of large enamelled mugs with us.

We picked until the mugs were falf full. Then we punctured the cans with my knife, and poured the milk on the berries. No sugar was needed. Nature aided by plentiful sunshine had provided her own sweetening.

That feast set a pattern: wild blackberries, I still believe, are best enjoyed on a hot day after miles walked, and with miles still to cover. This coast yields other berries to those who seek them out.

Some, like the salmonberry, are for the birds, and scarce worth the bother of gathering. But well-ripened Oregon grapes make a good, slightly tart pioneer's jelly, and no man has lived until he has sat down to a huckleberry pie stained by its overflow of rich juice.

There are also blue huckleberries, although the name we knew them by may not be their correct one. They grew in thickets at the 4,000-foot level on a mountain we used to frequent. We gathered them, not as individual berriess, but by the handful.

Mostly, that is. But one morning when we were filling a lard pail, we became aware from cracklings and occasional mild grumblings from down-slope that another harvester was at work.

We filled a lard pail, set it on a stump, then went off to split cedar shakes for a cabin roof. As we later learned, we should have taken that pail with us.

When we returned for it, our berries were scattered and the pail mashed flat. An unmannerly piece of bear-business, and in a place where there was plenty for all, entirely uncalled for.

At Little Lorraine in Cape Breton years later, I told a crew of swordfishermen about that bear and those berries. Someone suggested we fill time by picking bake-apples to go with our supper.

But those bake-apples disappointed me. Somehow, they lacked the flavor of blue huckleberries or wild blackberries ripened under a West Coast sun.
